President Warns Business To Curb Price Increases

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Eisenhower said Wednesday American business is going to have to curb price increases or consumers are going to rebel.
The President coupled this remark at a news conference with an equally emphatic declaration that labor, too, must use restraint about wage increases.

Eisenhower gave his views when asked if, in the light of recent steel price increases, his administration has any plan to combat inflation.

He did not answer the question directly but said no one should be more concerned about inflation than the working man whose income, he said, steadily lags behind rising costs of living.

Eisenhower said both labor and business must use restraint if this country is to get along without artificial controls.

He said if prices continue to rise the time will come when the American consumer will rebel in something the country does not want a big way and the result will be want.
