Place For 49th Star In U. S. Flag Awaits Decision

WASHINGTON (AP)—Old Glory will boast another star next year to represent America's newest and biggest state, Alaska. But where the star will be placed in the national flag has not been officially decided. Congressional sources say President Eisenhower may announce a study on how best to rearrange the 48 stars that have represented the states. However, presidential press secretary James C. Hagerly said he knows of no plans for such a study.

By law enacted in 1818, another star must be added to the flag next Independence Day—the first July 4 following admission of the new state.

There has been no established procedure for rearranging the flag. In 1912 President William Howard Taft approved the present 48-star design which was recommended by an Army-Navy board after Arizona and New Mexico joined the Union.

Bill Dies In Congress

During the session of Congress just ended, the House passed a bill by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) spelling out general procedures for rearrangement of the flag. The measure died in the late rush for adjournment.

The bill would have called on the President to take steps toward effecting any necessary redesign. Supporters of the legislation said there should be no obstacle to the President proceeding even without congressional authorization.

Incidentally, citizens won't have to throw away their flags after next July 4 if they are not of the new 49-star variety. A presidential order allows flags on hand when a new state is admitted to be used until they become unserviceable.
