

Medieval Pomp, Pageantry Surrounded Pope In Most Impressive Ceremonies

By FRANK BRUTTO

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Medieval pomp and pageantry surrounded Pius XII in the most impressive ceremonies of the Roman Catholic Church.

Yet no other pope ever received so many people as simply as he did.

His audience, like those of his predecessor, Pius XI, were "a window on the world." No pontiff had ever looked so keenly from that window as did Pius XII.

Pius XII established many records. But the one for which millions will remember him in the immediate years to come is this: He met more people than any other pontiff. The way was made easy for anyone who wished to see him.

He received more than 10 million persons — rulers and masses, rich and poor. There were private audiences with pageantry, as when he received Princess Elizabeth, who was to become English queen. There were less formal, and informal special audiences, and great general audiences at which humble thousands plucked at his sleeve or tried to touch his robes with rosary beads and crosses.

He received thousands of GIs after Rome's liberation. He received U. S. senators and congressmen during those months and urged them to devote themselves to aiding people of less fortunate nations.

Twice weekly during the 1950 Holy Year, general audiences were held in St. Peter's Basilica. Sometimes even the world's biggest church could not hold all the pilgrims.

His uncommon touch with the common man was evident. "Excuse me if I made you wait a little," he said one day.

The people, hearing this use of the familiar first person singular instead of the formal "we," were astonished and silent. A moment later, Pius established easy communication and the play of answers and questions was under way.

During the Holy Year, Pius XII gave some 1,500 hours to more than 6,000 audiences of all kinds. He spoke on subjects that ranged from philosophy to smoking. "You are surprised that we should receive you," he told a tobacco workers' congress. "But why not? You represent a large section of workers. That is reason enough."

Next: Communism and the search for peace.

What Manner Of Men Are These Ten Kingpins Who Rule The Movie World?

By BOB THOMAS

AP Motion Picture Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — What manner of men are the 12 famous stars who are now the kingpins of the movie world?

The majority come from the heartland of America. They were born in such places as Winterset, Iowa (John Wayne), O'Fallon, Ill. (William Holden) and Indiana, Pa. (James Stewart). Only two came from a metropolis: New Yorkers Burt Lancaster and Tony Curtis.

Just one was a foreigner: Cary Grant, born Archibald Leach in Bristol, England.

Most of them came from humble beginnings. Gregory Peck's and Wayne's fathers were druggists, Curtis' was a barber, Frank Sinatra's a boxer and Clark Gable's an oil field worker.

Came Up Hard Way
All the stars came up the hard way. Before they clicked as actors, Lancaster was an acrobat, Grant a stillwalker, Gable a lumberjack and Kirk Douglas a bellhop.

So you think that America worships youth? Then it may surprise you to learn that the average age of the dozen most successful film stars is 47.

Only Marlon Brando (34) and Curtis (33) are under 40. Three of the dozen are over 50: Grant (54), Gable and Gary Cooper (both 57).

What about their physical characteristics? Handsomeness in men is a matter of divided opinion. But I would hazard that of the 12, only Curtis might be classed as a pretty boy. The others have good looks with rugged rather than classical features.

They run rather slim and rangy. Sinatra, Brando and Curtis are 5 feet 10, but all of the others are 6 feet or over. Top man is Wayne at 6 feet 4 and a solid 210 pounds.

Most of the others manage to keep in the 160- to 180-pound bracket through rigorous exercise and diet.

They are not necessarily the most honored actors in films. Only half of them have won Academy Awards.

Their records would seem to belie the claim that Hollywood is a slinky place for marriage. Half of the golden dozen have been married only once.

They are all pros. They average almost 19 years of experience in films, and most of them had some experience on the stage before coming to Hollywood. (Exceptions: Wayne, Cooper). Cooper has the most film experience—32 years.

But beyond the statistics, what are the qualities that have made them kings of the film world?

All are strong personalities with plenty of drive. Don't let Stewart's drawl and Cooper's "yup" fool you. They have worked hard to get to the top of the heap. Now they've got to work even harder. There are plenty of young stars eager to take their places.

Basically, they are thoroughly masculine types. They seldom play weak characters; when they do, the result is usually a failure. But manliness is not enough. They must also effect a communication with the audience, and they do that through the emotions.

"The main thing we do is give people an emotional experience," explains James Stewart. "If we don't get it into a picture, it's usually a flop. If we do get it, the picture has a chance of being really great."

Guided Missiles Accuracy Proven

By BREMERTON, Wash. (AP) —

How accurate are guided missiles fired from submarines? Lt. Cmdr. Hugh G. Nott, skipper of the Grayback, provided the answer while his sub went through tests in Puget Sound. The Grayback fired the Regulus II and is the first Navy underwater craft designed as a guided missile launcher.

"We could hit the ball park in Los Angeles from here (a distance of about 1,200 miles)," he said. "Maybe not in the $4.50 seats, but somewhere on the grounds."
