

Teachers Say Hickory Would Solve Problem

The tune of the hickory stick can still be heard in classrooms throughout the nation.

This is one of the main themes which education experts use to counter charges that lax discipline in public schools is helping to increase juvenile delinquency.

A National Education Association survey of more than 4,000 teachers reveals that about half of them have the corporal punishment with which they are not coddling pupils. They explain that all schools have disciplinary programs which are usually enforced with some type of punishment.

Many school officials believe that largely restrictive methods should be used to make kids toe the mark. Pupil control is usually maintained by imposing such conduct penalties as keeping students after school, taking away their privileges and reprimanding them. Other important enforcement methods are suspension and expulsion from school, assigning special tasks and corporal punishment.

Other schools operate under the philosophy that discipline should be learned like any other subject. This program attempts to teach pupils their responsibilities to society and how to meet them.

It's this so-called "new concept" of discipline that's largely responsible for the verbal spankings which schools are suffering in the controversy on classroom law and order.

Critics claim that this system is too lax and often results in a complete breakdown of classroom control.

Advocates of the "new concept" counter this charge by explaining that it is supported by psychological and educational research.

They also point to the large number of law-abiding graduates from schools using this system as further proof that it is not a disciplinary bugaboo.

And they usually cap their arguments by explaining that the "new concept" has not abolished punishment. Instead, these school officials explain, it imposes penalties especially designed to fit the nature of the offense.

For instance, punishment for breaking a window would be to make the offender pay for the damage instead of whipping him or making him stay after school. Officials of the education association say, however, that their studies show the disciplinary trend still leans toward regular types of punishment. They explain there's more talk about the new concept than actual practice.

But this doesn't mean that corporal punishment is the answer to keeping kids out of trouble, education experts insist. Investigations of classroom disciplinary measures reveal that teachers with authority to give spankings have about as much trouble with their pupils as those who don't.

But this doesn't mean that school officials emphasize that the real causes of juvenile delinquency do not lie within classroom disciplinary systems.

They blame such well known social faults as unsatisfactory home conditions, irresponsible parents and lack of parental supervision due to mothers working outside the home.

Education experts also accuse large overcrowded schools for student behavior problems. They believe many disciplinary headaches would be eased if more classrooms and teachers could be provided for the booming school-age population.

In addition, schools are trying to combat the delinquency problem by cooperating with community agencies concerned with youth development; providing special guidance programs and promoting pupil organizations which stress good citizenship.

Dave Beck Loses Bid To Have His Trial Postponed

TACOMA (AP)—Former Teamster boss Dave Beck lost his bid today for postponement of his income tax evasion trial scheduled to open in federal court here Nov. 10.

U. S. District Judge George H. Bole, sitting temporarily on the bench in Washington, D.C., mailed an order denying a defense motion for an indefinite continuance of the trial.

Beck's attorney had argued that the ex-Teamsters Union president would be unable to receive a fair and impartial trial because of public hostility toward him.

Judge Bole denied both the motion for a continuance and one for a pre-trial hearing and presentation of what his defense called "communist bias."

The judge said in his order that "no proper or useful purpose" would be served by further hearings or additional arguments. He had granted Beck three postponements previously.

Beck was indicted by a federal grand jury in August, 1957, and charged with evading payment of $249,600 in income taxes for the years 1950-53.

Admiral Denies McElroy Promised New Weapons

GUAM (AP)—Adm. Harry Felt denied today that Secretary of Defense McElroy had promised modern weapons to the Philippines.

Felt, commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific commented: "What the secretary said was that the United States is always willing to sit down with its friends and discuss revision of policies—but not that we would send modern weapons to the Philippines."

McElroy had been reported in Manila as saying the United States would provide the Philippines with modern weapons for defense. The secretary commented as he boarded a U.S. Air Force plane. He is on a world inspection tour of U.S. military installations.

Felt commented reports of McElroy's contacts at a stopover in Guam, en route to his headquarters in Honolulu.
