Red Satellites War On Excess Drinking Habit

VIENNA (AP) — Taking a cue from Nikita Khrushchev, European satellite officials are campaigning against excessive drinking.

The Budapest newspaper Nepszava complains that bootlegging has become a national plague in Red-Ruled Hungary.

Once only the country folk in Hungary were moonshiners, but now illegal distilling has become big business in the cities, fueling the tax collector as well as fueling industrial production as people drink increasingly.

The Hungarian Red Cross has published figures to show that alcoholism is costing the country nearly eight million man work-days a year, as well as causing most of its auto accidents and broken homes.

Latest of the satellites to announce a drive against drink is Czechoslovakia. The country's police boss, Interior Minister Rudolf Barak, kicked off the campaign at a Prague news conference.

He was flanked by high officials of the Health Ministry and the Ministry of Justice, who emphasized that if the people don't stop drinking for their own good the state prosecutor will catch them.

No Headway So Far

Barak and company announced that little progress had been made in Czechoslovak temperance drives so far.

Added Barak: "And recently we have an increasing new menace—that is the illegal distilling of spirit. In the first half of 1958 our police discovered 1,328 illegal distilleries."

Czechoslovak authorities complained that raising the prices of the local whisky, vodka or schappis did not curb drinking.

"We found," they reported, "that a slight decline in the purchase of stronger drinks was more than increased in spending for beer and wine—the strongest the strongest beer."

What to do?

Barak suggested one remedy: "in addition to the police drive on drunks and bootleggers. Let all cafes stock up on more lemonade and mineral water."

Monster Camera May Be Hoisted Into Earth Orbit

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Reports circulated at this famous missile center today that a monster camera reconnaissance satellite weighing several tons may be launched in the next few months.

The reports center around Sentry, the Air Force "camera in the sky" project which could be the first to relay back pictures of the world—including Russia—as the satellite whirrs through orbit.

Sentry came to the fore when one of the huge service towers for Convair's Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile was modified and extended recently.

Maj. Gen. Donald N. Yates, missile center commander, said the Air Force was taking advantage of a slowdown, when the tower is not being used, to make modifications to accommodate a follow-on series of Atlas firings.

When Sentry is launched it is expected to use the mighty Atlas as the booster for a two-stage launching rocket.

Some quarters believe a small prototype of the camera satellite, weighing several hundred pounds, will be fired from the cape as a prelude to the larger version which will be blasted from Vandenberg Air Force Base missile grounds in California.
