

Nasser, Khrushchev Battle In Open

Brickbats Exchanged Over Iraq

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—The fight between Gamal Abdel Nasser and Nikita Khrushchev was out in the open today after a bitter exchange of words in the struggle for control of Iraq.

The Soviet premier and the president of the United Arab Republic for the first time pulled off the wraps and accused each other of fomenting trouble in the Middle East.

Khrushchev accused Nasser of stirring up trouble in Iraq in an attempt to overthrow the Communist-influenced regime of Premier Abdel Karim Kassem.

He proclaimed the Soviet Union on the side of Kassem and warned Nasser that his new policy of attacking communism was "doomed to failure."

Granting a 550-million-ruble ($137,500,000) loan to Iraq in Moscow, Khrushchev told the representatives of the Kassem regime: "You have selfless and reliable friends who are ready to come to your aid any time you are in trouble."

A bitter retort came from Nasser, who until then had confined his attacks on Communists to Arab Reds and had carefully refrained from mentioning Moscow.

"Hands Off Pledges" "We do not interfere in the internal affairs of the Soviet Union or support a faction of it against another faction," replied Nasser in a statement distributed by his semi-official Middle East News Agency.

"Mr. Khrushchev's support of communism in our country is a challenge to the Arab people's will."

Khrushchev and Nasser had clasped hands in hailing the July 14 revolt in Iraq that brought Kassem to power with the assassination of King Faisal and his pro-Western Premier Nuri Said. They joined in proclaiming the revolution a blow at the West.

The strain between Khrushchev and Nasser is the result of the abortive revolt in Iraq last week of army officers sympathetic to Nasser's goal of pan-Arab unity. Kassem's government in Baghdad coming more and more under the influence of the Iraqi Communists, accused Nasser of fomenting the rebellion. Nasser in turn has mounted a steadily rising campaign against Kassem and his Red supporters.

Khrushchev in Moscow accused Nasser of trying to force Iraq to join the United Arab Republic. Nasser called this charge a "distortion of fact because we have always announced that our path is Arab solidarity, and in order to achieve this there must be unanimous Arab approval."

House Education Group Beginning Work On Oregon Community Colleges System

SALEM (AP) — The Senate Education Committee Monday began work on far-reaching legislation to set up community colleges throughout Oregon.

Two bills are before the committee. One would set up 15 or 16 education districts to operate the proposed colleges. The other would make it easier to create the colleges by amending the present laws.

The committee now is working on the bill creating the districts. The state Board of Education recently opposed the idea of setting up the districts. It said the state can not afford to have a large number of them, but that it should follow the recommendation for seven districts in the survey of Dr. William H. Flesher of Ohio State University.

Sen. Donald R. Husband (R-Eugene), a member of the committee, said he is against the district set-up, but favors the bill to change the present laws.

The bill by Sen. Monroe Sweetland (D-Milwaukie), chairman of the Senate Education Committee, and Rep. J. Pat Metke (R-Bend) would include 15 area education districts. It would involve an appropriation of almost $500,000 in the next biennium.

OTI Slash Possible The Board of Education said it wants to make sure that the community college plan would not take funds away from Oregon Technical Institute at Klamath Falls.

Sweetland said he feels that "unless the Legislature takes the bit into its teeth, the state isn't going to have any community colleges."

Oregon now has one community college—Bend Community College. But Sweetland noted that other areas, including Coos Bay, are ready to open post-high school education programs.

Educators have told the committee that one of the most serious education problems is providing education comparable to the 13th and 14th grades.

Under both bills, the state, local district and students would share the cost of operating the schools.

Sweetland said that not all of the districts in the state could afford a community college. He said provisions are in the bill to provide transfer of students from a non-active district.

The districts would provide college courses and vocational education.

Ed Easton, member of the OSC faculty, said the Oregon members of the American Assn. of University Professors don't think Oregon salaries should be as high as the University of California.

But he said, "We will have to stay somewhere near the University of California."

Clifford Maitor, dean of the OSC School of Business and Technology, said Oregon schools now are in a satisfactory position for obtaining teachers. But he said that position will get worse unless salaries are increased along with other schools.

Two-Year Scale Advised Paul Sivins, of the University of Oregon, told the subcommittee that any salary increase should be divided between 1960 and 1961.

Strand said the state can't afford to lag in salaries now and hope to make it up in future years.

He warned the legislators that buildings can be built in a hurry but it takes a long time to build up a fine faculty.

The witnesses said the position is not as drastic as 1957.

Restaurant Delegation Slates Roseburg Flight

Roseburg will be visited by a flying delegation of the Washington State Restaurant Assn. Wednesday.

Eighteen members of the group on a flying tour of the Northwest will pause briefly in the city during the stopover of West Coast Airlines' regular morning flight. They will be accompanied by Seattle Seafair Queen Judy Paulson.

Traditionally the group presents a gift to the mayor of Roseburg. In 1958 Mayor Arlo Jacklin received a miniature totem pole in ceremonies at the airport.

In the mayor's absence Wednesday, City Council President Pete Serafin will represent the city.

Mayor In Hospital

Mayor Arlo Jacklin sustained an injury to his right foot and has been admitted to Mercy Hospital for treatment.

Russia Serious, General Warns

TACOMA (AP)—Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther said Monday "it would be wrong to assume the Russians are bluffing" in their ultimatum on Berlin.

However, the American Red Cross president and former NATO commander, declared he believes it unlikely the Reds are willing to risk total war.

Gen. Gruenther made the statement at Fort Lewis after a visit with Brig. Gen. John H. McGee, assistant 4th division commander.

Asked about speculation that President Eisenhower might name him to succeed Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, should illness force Dulles' retirement, Gen. Gruenther said it is just that—"speculation." He said the President had never discussed the matter with him.

In his talk at Fort Lewis, he described the work of the Red Cross and the need for understanding by both the public and service men.

"Last year the Red Cross spent nearly $34,000,000 in services to the armed forces," he reported. "Much of it is a quiet job—checking emergency relief requests, loans and assistance grants—that is often overlooked."

2 Nations Study Kootenai Dam

CHICAGO (AP) — Proposals of the United States to build a storage dam on the Kootenai river near Libby, Mont., were under study Monday by the International Joint Commission which opened a three-day session.

Douglas McKay, former Secretary of the Interior and head of the U. S. section of the American-Canadian body, said the storage dam project, authorized by Congress is part of detailed plans for the development of the upper Columbia river in Canada now being considered by the commission.

The commission, which can make binding rules concerning boundary water problems involving the U. S. and Canada, will have no recommendations to make as a result of the Chicago session, McKay predicted.

Four additional sessions of the commission have been scheduled, McKay said, including the annual meeting of the six-man group in Washington April 7-9 and in Montreal, Que., April 30-May 1.

A statement of progress made at the Chicago session may be released Wednesday, McKay reported.

Commission studies of joint water use problems have been conducted since the commission was authorized by the two governments a year and a half ago.

Canadian and U. S. engineers and commission staff members Monday began presentation of graphs and charts detailing a report made by the Columbia Engineering Board which was presented to the commission March 1.

Sessions of the commission are private.

McKay added that the study of the Kootenai river dam will embrace problems of water diversion and its effect on Columbia river water supply. The Kootenai also lies in Canada.

Commission studies eventually will be reported in recommendations to the governments of Canada and the United States on the development of the Columbia for the benefit of the two nations.

Representing the United States on the commission are McKay, Eugene W. Weber and Francis L. Adams. Chairman of the Canadian section is Gen. A. G. L. McNaughton and Representatives are D. M. Stephens and J. Lucien Dandrea.

Fish-Wildlife Men Clash With Army Projects Report

PORTLAND (AP) — An Army Engineers recommendation for Congress to authorize construction of new Columbia River Basin projects was criticized Monday by two regional U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials.

Leo L. Laythe of Portland, regional director of the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife, and Samuel J. Hutchinson of Seattle, regional director of the Bureau of Commercial Fisheries, said they opposed authorization of the high Mountain Sheep dam, the Wenaha, the Asotin, Penny Cliffs and Bruce Eddy projects "pending further consideration of their effects on fish and wildlife resources."

They told of their views in a joint letter to Col. Allen F. Clark Jr., Northwest division engineer.

They said the Corps of Engineers' Columbia Basin Development report—better known as the revised 308 report—included statements about fish and wildlife in the basin "that are not wholly in agreement with opinions and policies of the Department of the Interior and this service."

The regional directors said in their letter: "Your report recommends authorization of Bruce Eddy, Wenaha, Penny Cliffs and high Mountain Sheep, although fishery technicians of this service and the states who are best informed on fish passage at such projects agree that the problems of satisfactory fish passage at high dams are far from solved."

"Much more research is needed to assure fully successful passage of downstream and upstream migrants at such projects," they said. They were concerned that the Penny Cliffs Reservoir might destroy the elk herds in the Clearwater River Basin.

Packers Protest Salmon Closure

SEATTLE (AP)—Major salmon packers, already staggered by a ban on fish traps in Southeast Alaska, planned to meet Tuesday to consider their latest blow, the closure of Bristol Bay.

Nick Bez, prominent in Alaskan fisheries, summed up the mood Monday.

"In our fishing industry, it looks like between the Japanese and Secretary Seaton and his traps, we're all going to hell. All we're doing is hatch fish for the Japs."

Losses that would result from the closure were difficult to reckon. W. C. Arnold, managing director of the Alaska Salmon Industry Inc. estimated value of the plants in the Bristol Bay area at more than 20-million dollars. He said during peak time the area employed 4,000 fishermen and other employees — 1,500 from the Yukon-Kuskokwim region and 2,500 from "outside."

George Johansen, secretary-treasurer of the Alaska Fishermen's Union said the two restrictions would affect approximately 2,400 members of his union. He estimated the Bristol Bay closure would cost nearly 1,000 jobs; the earlier fishtrap ban nearly 1,400.

Johansen and William Calvert, president of the Intercoastal Packing Co., agreed Japanese fishing this year could ruin the 1960-61 Bristol Bay run. They said Japanese are catching immature salmon in their small-mesh nets.

The travel industry also would be hard hit by the Interior Department decision. The Bristol Bay area was reported to draw nearly a million dollars of air travel each year. And the Alaska Steamship Co. was believed to be considering revision of its service to the area.
