

Step-In Dresses Eliminate Need For Back Zippers In New Styles

NEW YORK (AP) — At least one designer does not underestimate the fury of a woman who cannot, despite her contortions, unzip the back of her dress.

He is Jean Louis, a Frenchman from Hollywood, who brought a bevy of beautiful models and boxes of new fashion ideas for the debut of his spring collection here today.

One such idea was the "step-in" tunic dress with a panel of buttons marching down the front far enough for easy entry; feet first, eliminating the need for zippers.

Jean Louis' coat-dress is another zipperless style which is not only preserves sacroiliacs, it is guaranteed not to deflate those bouffant hairdos which Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy did so much to make popular.

Although it buttons down the front like a coat, the style resemblance ends there. Like other so-called coat dresses introduced at this spring market, the West Coast couturiers are too fitted and belted to be anything else but a dress.

As the show hurried on, the wardrobe progressed from mannish suits with bowler hats; to coats narrow at the shoulder and flared wide from the fitted bosom to floral pastel costume suits; to sultry black crepe cocktail dresses draped in back; and finally to chiffon and beaded formalwear. Except for those step-in dresses, most of Louis' styling was in retreat. The West Coast couturier obviously appreciates a tanned back, for some backs are scooped so low and wide they nearly eliminate the back bodice of the dress altogether.

Another Franco-American from the East Coast, Jacques Tiffreau, introduced the Obi silhouette Thursday during the Monte-Sano spring show. Being much closer to the Orient geographically, it was only fitting that Jean Louis should go one better with the Kabuki costume.

Those loose, slit sleeves of the Japanese kimono are in Louis' daytime dresses, theater suits, floating chiffon, rustling satin, and even sober black floor-length dinner gowns.

Although other American designers seem to have deserted ostrich feathers as well as clinking crystals, blinding beads, shimmering sequins, Jean Louis uses a Hollywood following could hardly eliminate the showy costumes.

And to prove how well Jean Louis does at dramatizing a not-exactly-young figure, a grandmother modeled a glittering sequined floor-length gown, trailing a stole of twinkling silver sequins behind her. The crowd applauded wildly.

The model was Marlene Dietrich.

Hole-In-The-Ground Is Easily Reached, But Little Known Geological Formation

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hole-in-the-Ground, Ore., is a vast circular depression, nearly a mile across and more than 400 feet deep, in northern Lake County.

It is one of Oregon's unique geologic formations, easily reached by automobile but unknown to people generally.

Hollis E. Dole, director of the Oregon Department of Geology and Mineral Industries, says it looks so much like a meteorite crater that a mining claim was staked out years ago in the hope of finding nickel or other mineral remains.

But there is no foreign mineral there. Hole-in-the-Ground resulted from a great volcanic explosion, not from the blow of a meteorite.

The story of its formation is told in the October issue of Ore-Bin, the department's publication, by Edward A. Groh, Portland geologist, and Norman V. Peterson, field geologist for the department. The two recently completed a detailed study of the area and established that the hole was produced some thousands of years ago — when a great mass of molten rock surged up through a vent, came in contact with water-saturated rock, and exploded.

The force to create such a hole, the geologists say, would be the equivalent of about five million tons of TNT.

The water, in that now parched country, came from an ancient lake that covered the land to a depth of 200 feet.

Fort Rock, a semi-circular rock mass that juts up startlingly from the arid plain about six miles southeast of Hole-in-the-Ground, was formed the same way, Peterson and Groh report, but one wall of it was washed away by the lapping waves along the shore of that old lake.

About six miles west of Hole-in-the-Ground is Big Hole, another of the broad floors of a volcanic crater enclosed by a steep-walled ring. It has a heavy stand of timber in and around the rim, making detail difficult to see.

But Hole-in-the-Ground is right at the dividing line of timber and desert. It is so close to the line that along its western wall, where shadows hold snow longest and result in moisture, there is a stand of trees. The eastern wall, a mile away, is in the desert.

The Ore-Bin says motorists can reach Hole-in-the-Ground by driving 30 miles south of Bend on Highway 57, turning southeast on Highway 51 and going 25 miles to a well-marked Forest Service road, then going east about two miles. A road bulldozed through the pumice soil circles the hole along the top of the rim.

'Most Wanted' Man Captured By FBI

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)—Arizona highway patrolman arrested John Robert Sawyer Friday, five days after he had been added to the FBI's list of 10 most wanted criminals.

Sawyer, 30, was stopped in Wickenburg, 50 miles northwest of Phoenix, by Patrolman Bernard C. Irwin Jr., who spotted Sawyer's car on the highway and followed him into the city. Sawyer offered no resistance.

Brought to Phoenix, he waived preliminary hearing and was held in lieu of $50,000 bond on charges of robbing a branch of the First Westside Bank of Omaha, Neb., last Aug. 7.

Gun Course Slated By Oakland Lions

By EDITH DUNN

The gun safety course currently sponsored by the Oakland Lions Club is open to children from 12 to 18 and conforms to the standards set by the state Game Commission.

Children may register at Buck's Barber Shop of Stearns Hardware Store after which they will be assigned classes and instructors.

The recent light bulb sale conducted by the Lions was a success with all light bulbs sold. In connection with its sight conservation program the club has already purchased two pairs of glasses for children who otherwise would have done without.

Dinner Planned
Beta Pi sorority will serve the dinner set for Saturday night at the Veteran's Memorial Hall at which time Oakland Lions will host their wives.

The Oakland Volunteer Fire Dept. was called out to a fire at the George McCloskey home recently. No damage was reported.
