League Of Women Voters Unveils Booklet On Oregon Constitution

Six women from the Roseburg chapter of the League of Women Voters were in Corvallis this week for the unveiling of a new Oregon League of Women Voters booklet on Oregon's constitution.

Women from the local leagues around the state also listened to preliminary proposals also from seven Constitutional Revision Commission members.

The new league booklet is called "Sense, Sentiment and the Oregon Constitution."

Beside speakers from the commission, the women leaguers heard from Mrs. Jonathan Benjamin, state league constitutional revision chairman. She stressed the fact that leagues will be actively working to promote good constitutional revision.

Attending from Roseburg were Mrs. James Lombard, president of the Roseburg club, Mrs. Ger-

Douglas Fir Has Printed Final Issue

The home weekly news publication, Douglas Fir, was distributed for the last time today, according to its editor Dick Gilman. The editorial in this week's publication was Gilman's swan song, he said.

He said his printing, lithography and commercial photography business have expanded to such an extent that he could not do justice to the publication.

At its peak circulation, the publication was going to 2,450 families, a far cry from the first mimeographed publication which came out Nov. 16, 1945.

Gilman said he and his wife, Reva, had started the publication with $43.50 worth of equipment and a borrowed typewriter. Their printing experience was almost nil, he said.

Gilman had had some writing experience while he was connected with the International Woodworkers of America in Portland. He had been both secretary-treasurer of the district council and had run the union's employment agency. It was there he also wrote a home-span column for the union paper in which he glorified what he calls "the little man" by telling interesting and humorous incidents about them.

When he came to Roseburg, he adopted the same idea in his Douglas Fir. Initially, however, he started an employment agency for loggers and sawmill men. But he spent more and more time with the paper until he was working "anywhere from 14 to 20 hours a day. Then he turned to the Douglas Fir full time.

He says he and his wife have missed only two issues since the paper was started in 1945, both of these were due to vacations.

Gilman will continue his printing and commercial photography at his shop in the Fiegel Building in northeast Roseburg.

SIX LEGS? That's right! And you can count them if you like as Ralph Howard, Tenmile holds a lamb born on his ranch Wednesday. Besides having the regulation number of four legs of the usual spots, the little fellow has two more coming from the upper chest which appear to be just dangling. The lamb's back is twisted with one hind leg shorter than the other. The lamb is kept in the house and bottle fed to prevent pneumonia. (News-Review Photo by Andy Fautheree).

Cow Creek Development Group Hears Fire Protection Talks

Two guest speakers shared the program at the Rural Fire District meeting this week at Glendale High School, reports Mrs. G. B. Fox, correspondent.

The men are Bob Waters of Salem, deputy state fire marshal, and Cliff Thrasher of Roseburg, chief of the Roseburg Rural Fire Protection District and Douglas County fire defense chief, Gerald Fox, president of the Cow Creek Valley Development Association sponsor of the meeting, acted as moderator.

Waters outlined the purpose of a rural fire district and described the legal setup for institution and operation. Thrasher outlined operation of his own department. Both men answered questions posed by the audience.

Recommendation Made

Waters recommended that the local group consider the voluntary type of organization because of the savings in cost compared to paid departments. He quoted Oregon Law concerning boundaries of a fire district and discussed petitioning of the County Court for an election for vote by the people.

Waters said he could not promise insurance savings from the establishment of a fire district. Both he and other speakers and those who joined in the discussion pointed out that while there is no actual assurance of insurance rate changes, such rate reductions usually do occur.

Model Railroaders View Film At Thursday Meet

A program of interest to model railroad enthusiasts was presented Thursday night at the Joseph Lane Junior High School.

The event, arranged by faculty member Bill Greenan, featured a 30-minute film entitled "Fun With Model Railroading" and a display of model trains and railroad facilities.

Greenan said the display was set up by various model train hobbyists of Roseburg.

He said the program was held to determine if area train hobbyists are interested in organizing a model railroading club. Adults as well as children are included in the proposal, he said.

Lower Umpqua Tree Plant Set March 21

March 21 has been set for the annual lower Umpqua area public schools' tree planting expedition.

The decision was made by the Lower Umpqua Tree Planting Committee, headed by Bill Gleason, Cascades Plywood Corp. forester.

The site to be planted this year is the old Levenhagen farm across the Umpqua River from Scottsburg.

About 20,000 Douglas fir seedlings will be secured by the International Paper Co. Woodlands Department to be planted by an estimated 575 youngsters in the four grades fifth through eighth.

Reedsport, Gardiner and Elkton elementary schools will be represented.

As has been traditional, a special guest of honor and participant will be John Skaaluren, who inspired the first planting event in 1946.
