Woman's Fists Help Take Bank Robber

NEW YORK (AP) — "I saw those men fighting," said Joan Coleman, a shapely young typist. "My first thought was to get out of the way. But I found myself in the middle of it."

That's how Miss Coleman, 20, described her role in the capture of a bank robber Thursday.

Police said the holdup man stuck a note demanding $5,000 into a teller John Loughlin's cage in a Chase Manhattan Bank branch. The note said, "Don't make a false move. I have a gun."

Two bank guards jumped the man in the lobby of the building. Just then, Miss Coleman happened by and added her flailing fists to the battle.

The bank robber, a husky 6-footer, fled from the girl and the guards, but bookkeeper John McGregor, 43, felled him with a flying tackle.
