Revision Group Plans New Look At Funds Limit

SALEM (AP)—Oregon's Constitution Revision Commission will take another look at its recommendation to remove the highway fund earmarking provision from the state Constitution.

Under this provision, revenues from motor vehicle license fees, fuel taxes and truck levies can be used only for construction and maintenance of highways and parks.

A member of the commission, Rep. Clarence Barton, D-Coquille, said he would move for reconsideration. He had supported removal of the clause. The reconsideration will come when the commission, which has finished its policy work, takes a look at the final draft.

The commission's action on the highway fund has become the most controversial of its actions. It has been protested by road user groups, the Highway Commission, and the Legislative Interim Committee on Highways. They fear that highway revenues might be diverted to non-highway uses.

The revision commission said that the legislature can be trusted to spend the money properly. It also said that the Constitution should not deal with such matters as earmarking.

New Highway Signs Slated

The state Highway Department will soon be making adjustments in signing of the different routes of Highway 99 through Douglas County and the rest of Oregon, according to Tom Edwards, Assistant state highway engineer.

The state Highway Commission has adopted a policy of marking the Interstate system of highways compatible with the recommendations of the American Association of State Highway Officials. Briefly, this policy is that where the interstate system is developed separately from an existing U. S. numbered route, it will be signed only for the Interstate route number. Where the interstate system is developed over an existing U. S. numbered route, both the U. S. and the interstate system shields and route numbers will be used.

For Douglas County U. S. 99 signs will be put up on the section of the old highway between Anlauf and a point south of Yoncalla and from the Oakland interchange south on the old highway to Canyonville.
