

Snake's Appetite Leads To Trouble

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—College student Mike Krieger wanted to help a friend's snake work up an appetite, so he put the 7-foot anaconda in a bathtub of warm water in his apartment.

As frequently happens when someone is in the tub, the phone rang.

Krieger, 20, returned to find the anaconda—which crushes its prey like the boa constrictor—disappearing down the toilet. He grabbed its tail and started pulling.

In the next apartment, Bob Tisworth, a graduate student at California Institute of Technology where Krieger is an undergraduate, happened to look into his bathroom, unaware of the drama next door. The snake's head had appeared in his plumbing.

Still unaware of dual interest, each man bent to the task of saving the snake. Mike and two friends—not wanting neighbors to know of their pet—lugged at the tail. Bob enlisted two fire department units, several policemen and a Humane Society worker in a try to coax the snake out.

It took an hour and a half for the two factions to learn they were at odds over the ends.

The men then broke the plumbing and retrieved the snake, by now perhaps with an appetite but certainly with little stomach for further such adventures.

The Humane Society took custody.

Krieger explained that the warm water in the tub helped the snake—a cold-blooded tropical animal—raise its body temperature and thus feel more interested in eating.
