U. S. Supreme Court Takes Action On Some Big Cases

Justice Dissents WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court ordered this week that a federal court in New York hear a suit contending the makeup of that state's legislature discriminates against metropolitan residents. The action was by 7-1 vote with Justice Harlan dissenting. Harlan also dissented when the court handed down its landmark ruling March 26 in a major controversy of present times—representation of urban voters vs. rural voters in state legislatures. In that decision, in a Tennessee case, the court reversed long precedents and held that federal courts may consider whether the apportionment of legislative seats denies groups of citizens their constitutional rights. Justice Frankfurter also dissented in the Tennessee case but is ill and did not take part in consideration of Monday's order. Since the ruling in the Tennessee case, the court has also held in a case from Michigan that state courts may properly consider issues of malapportionment of the legislature. In other actions today, the high court: Held in a case potentially involving millions of dollars that federal disability payments made to veterans and deposited in savings and loan associations may not be attached by creditors. Chief Justice Warren and Justice Frankfurter took no part in the decision. Justice Douglas disagreed in part with holdings by the other six justices. Rejected 5-3 claims for damages by seven longshoremen who said they suffered injuries from a vessel at Galveston, Tex., with wheat which had been treated with a fumigant. Declined to consider, and thus let stand, a lower court ruling that Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman exceeded his authority when he directed that meat packers label as "imitation ham" smoked hams to which water had been added. Rate Problem Due Agreed to hear at its next term beginning in October litigation over a freight rate advantage the Interstate Commerce Commission approved for the ports of Baltimore, Md., Norfolk, Va., and Philadelphia vs. New York, Albany and New England ports on exports and imports moving between the ports and the Midwest. A federal court in Boston set aside the ICC approval, and the appeal to the highest court is by the ICC, Southern port authorities and Southern railroads. Denied a hearing to William G. Soier, a Philadelphia teacher, fired in 1954 after allegedly failing to cooperate with the city school superintendent in a loyalty investigation. He had been an English teacher in the schools for 25 years. The suit over the New York legislature's makeup contends that both the Senate and Assembly were deliberately apportioned in a manner discriminatory against citizens of metropolitan areas. It was dismissed Jan. 11 by a three-judge federal court.
