Story Of Imaginative 11-Year-Old Is Both Comic And Compassionate

Frederick Darling's short stories have appeared in numerous magazines. "The Love Guy," is his first novel.

Knight In Shiny Armor
This is the story of Doug Davenport, a worse-than-typical 11-year-old, always in trouble, too crafty and cocky for comfort, according to all the adults who thwarted his schemes. In his own vivid imagination, Doug was a shining knight, eager to fight for justice, ready to rescue those in distress. Unfortunately, his daring deeds invariably ended in disaster, and the only person he kept having to rescue was himself.

Doug loved the outdoors, preferable to home which to him was a two-bedroom prison run by parents who made him conform to narrow, pointless rules. At the summer camp to which he was sent to be made a man of, he became involved in a fresh series of mishaps culminating in an incredible experience which proved once and for all that underneath his bravado lay a core of courage and control and the stirrings of a very grown-up kind of wisdom. In the book one finds the flawless logic and innocence that belongs only to the very young.

countries with hundreds of thousands of counterfeit English bank notes. The Nazis did their work so well that the notes were passed without question by Swiss banks and even by the Bank of England. The mass-produced notes bought Yugoslav patriots, paid the salaries of German agents in enemy countries and financed the rescue of Mussolini from the Badoglio regime in Italy.

Here is the true story of "Operation Bernhard" — the men behind it, the uncanny counterfeiting methods and the jealous Nazi party members who tried to sabotage the operation.

Cloak-And-Dagger
In the opinion of critics, "Operation Bernhard" by Anthony Pirie is "one of the best cloak-and-dagger stories yet to come out of World War II."

It takes place in the spring of 1945 when the German military successfully counterfeited over 100 million pounds in English bank notes. Here is the first detailed account of how they did it.

Nazi Secret Service Agents hatched a plot which they hoped would undermine the British economic plan seemed simple—flood England and the neutral

New Historical Book Off Press

By CHARLES V. STANTON
A new historical booklet, "God Made A Valley," is off the presses. Written by Welcome Martindale Combs and Sharon Combs Ross, the booklet is a history of Camas Valley from the time of the first settlers through to the present.

No attempt to present material in narrative form has been made by the authors. Instead the booklet is a pleasing compilation of facts concerning the settlement of the valley, incidents connected with growth, buildings, stage lines, a collection of anecdotes (principally concerning hunting), poems, letters, songs and essays by various persons.

Many facts were combed from files of the Daily News and the Roseburg Review and the consolidation of these papers into The News-Review.

Illustrations are from old prints obtained from descendants of the earlier settlers.

The history is extremely valuable, adding another to the various historical writings of several of the principal communities of the county.
