

Use Of Fur Is Profuse In New Fall Fashions

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) — The trend in fall fashions for women is back to the figure — if you can see it under the massive swathing of fur.

Use of fur for trimming is so profuse in the new collections that they're now referring to wall-to-wall carpeting of the stuff. Fur trimmings have been going great along Seventh Avenue, heart of the New York garment center, for the last five years. They're going even greater this year.

Look at the hem of a dress or coat — fur banding. Expose a suit jacket lining — fur. The collar of a coat — fur. An extra accessory for the slim, basic costume is a fur boa around the neck which is detachable — (the boa, not the neck). Or, if all else fails, wrap a skinny strip of mink, fox or sable snake-fashion around your wrist in lieu of the regular bracelet.

No single fur rules as the supreme favorite. Furs range from hamster and opossum to mink, sable and chinchilla. In the higher-priced clothes collections, the thing to do is use fur, but don't show it—much.

At Monto Sano & Pruzan, for instance, furs line coats of ensemble. Concession to the woman who feels she's wearing mink or nutria and wants to show it: Make the coats reversible.

Monte Sano & Pruzan is one of the firms which Wednesday showed new lines to reporters in town for the New York Couture Group's semi-annual "Press Week."

Donald Brooks, the 1962 winner of the American Fashion Critics Award to be presented formally in September, stuck with what has become a Brooks trademark and has made Mrs. John F. Kennedy one of his customers through retail outlets. This is the simple, uncluttered silhouette.

The Brooks silhouette generally was chemise, skimming easily over the body. In some instances, skirts had the hint of flare; in others, he marked the waistline a bit with a cummerbund inset of fabric.

Highlights of other collections shown Wednesday:

Cell Chapman — All the evening clothes from this designer-manufacturer set out to make a girl look like a girl, with almost always more neckline exposed than covered. Few can match Chapman at the art of draping fabric around curves. The halter proved to be her favorite method this season for neckline treatments.

Mollie Parnis — This designer and manufacturer whose custom-made Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the former First Lady, set the theme of her show with the announcement that the silhouette would "clearly mold the figure without marking the waistline."

Then she went right ahead and marked the waistline throughout the collection with narrow ropes of self-fabric belts, with cummerbund waistline treatments, and with fabric bow fronts tied at the middle.

Rosalie Macrini — This firm, which makes evening clothes, never has deserted the defined waistline. The new collection uses soft sashes, midriff beading and wide, crushable satin belts with oversize buckles to keep the mood.

Originals — The coat with the fitted look moved in at this firm, which makes coats only. It showed in both single-breasted and double-breasted versions. Sleeves were longer than in previous seasons, but they still bared the wrist. At this firm, as in many others, the checkerboard look in fabrics abounded. Some of the checks were an easy three inches square.

Countess Alexander — Showing her initial collection as a member of the Couture Group, this designer of late day and evening clothes sponsored the long slim dress, the theater costume with fitted over-bustle look, and fitted jackets scarf-tied on one side of the neckline.

Special Traffic Council To Study 'Hot Pursuit'

SALEM (UPI) — The chairman of Oregon's Traffic Safety Commission, Warne Nunn, this week appointed a special committee to study "hot pursuit" and potential penalties for those who attempt to outrun police vehicles.

Nunn, Gov. Mark Hatfield's executive assistant, named James G. Welch, Salem, to head the seven member committee.

Other members are State Police Superintendent H. G. Maison; Lane County District Judge William Beckett; Police Chief Oliver Reeves, La Grande; Baker County Sheriff Delmar Dixon; Marion County Dist. Atty. Gen. Leonard Pearlman.

Welch, managing editor of the Salem Capital Journal, said he would set a date for the committee's first meeting soon.

Thornton Says Scandals Grow Under Hatfield

SALEM (UPI) — Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton today focused attention on what he called "growing scandals" in the Republican Hatfield administration.

The Democratic nominee for governor listed the recent embezzlement of $25,000 in patients' funds at the State Hospital here, and the shortage of National Guard property at Camp Withycombe, "announced as $8,000 worth but obviously much more if in fact heavy equipment was taken."

Thornton's attack was another in what has become almost a daily verbal exchange of blows between Thornton and Gov. Mark Hatfield.

Thornton also criticized the all-Republican Board of Control for what he termed the board's "sudden interest" in eliminating surety company bonds on state employees handling public money.

This interest, Thornton said, in "cutting private bonding companies out of the state bonding field should cause the public to wonder what's up."

"Could it be that the governor is afraid of the growing scandals in his administration?" Thornton said.

Elimination of private surety bonds, and substituting a system whereby the state would insure itself, Thornton said, sounds like government competing with private business "which was so recently and roundly condemned at the Republican state convention in Bend."

Hatfield issued a one paragraph statement saying "this is another example of the attorney general's failure to do his homework in his desperate search for headlines. Earlier this week he cast reflections on the integrity of the Supreme Court and now he questions the fidelity of the mass of state employees."

Slayton Pins Hopes On Non-Solo Flight

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Deke Slayton, disappointed because a heart flutter permanently grounded him for solo space flights, today pinned his hopes on making an orbital mission with two or three other astronauts.

Slayton was in the Wisconsin woods with his family. Friends said they wanted to be left alone.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced this week that the 39-year-old Air Force major was being temporarily grounded since last spring because of the condition.

Medical specialists continued to examine Slayton since that time. They decided that the hazards of his condition were "too great" to permit him to make a solo space flight.

"Naturally I am greatly disappointed," Slayton said in a statement. "For more than three years I have been training and looking forward to an early flight assignment. But I am ready to do whatever is needed. I'll work wherever management feels I can best contribute to the program."
