W. I. Wands, manager of Consolidated Freight, suffered a broken leg while on a recent fishing trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Barnes have left for a three-week vacation. They will spend a few days at Yellowstone National Park before going on to Ulysses, Kans., for a visit with Mrs. Barnes' aunt, Mrs. Nellie Crawford.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Janssen and children, Ronnie, Randy and Kelli, have had as visitors at their Goetz Street home Mr. and Mrs. George Vander-Tuig and children, Sharyl, Stephen and Mark, of LeMars, Iowa. This was their first trip to Oregon in 15 years. Also visiting from out of state were the Rev. and Mrs. Eugene K. Hanson of Iowa City, Iowa. They were accompanied by their children, Luther and Cynthia. Both families had visited the Seattle World's Fair before coming to Roseburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Dexter Garey and son, Mark, of Seattle, Wash., were recent visitors at the home of Garey's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Garey, 452 W. Ball St. They came especially to attend Mrs. Dexter Garey's class reunion.

Mr. and Mrs. Dean Beckwith and children from Keokuk, Iowa, and Mrs. Joseph Ziols and children from Park Ridge, Ill., have been visiting with Beckwith's and Mrs. Ziols' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beckwith. They are also visiting a brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Freeman; her sister, Karen Freeman; and her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. John McCauley. Here for the week-end for a family reunion were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beckwith Jr. and family.

Coleus Plants' Brilliant Show Enhances Garden

The tender annual or perennial coleus plant, belonging to the mint family, has brilliantly variegated leaves ranging from maroon, crimson, red, yellow, green and combinations of these colors far surpassing any other plants in the garden for color. Their flower spikes are blue or lilac and are comparatively unimportant.

Like Sun, Good Soil
These plants require a minimum temperature of 55 degrees, and must be potted in rich, well drained soil when grown as houseplants. When grown outdoors in beds or borders they thrive in any good soil and like full sun. When grown in too much shade the leaves lose their brilliance.

Coleus are easily grown from seed. Seedlings show great variation in coloring and shape of their leaves. Seed are sown in February or March in a flower pot filled with light, sandy soil. Cover the seeds lightly with damp vermiculite or peat moss and place a pane of glass over the pot. Keep at a temperature of 65 to 75 degrees. The seedlings are pricked out and set 1 inch apart in flats of soil, well watered and shaded until established. They are then potted separately or planted outdoors in beds when danger of frost is past.

Propagation Easy
Coleus are also easily propagated by cuttings. Cuttings of young shoots about 2 inches in length are inserted in moist sand or vermiculite and covered with a bell jar until they have rooted or they may even be placed in water until rooted.

An application of liquid fertilizer every other week is very beneficial for both potted plants and those planted in beds out doors.

Coleus do not like sudden changes of temperature and those who want to winter-over outside plants as house plants are advised to bring them indoors while indoor and outdoor temperatures are fairly equal. Dropping of leaves usually follows exposure to sudden temperature changes.

FARM FOREST FACTS
BY BOB BRADLEY
COUNTY EXTENSION FORESTER

Cone collecting time is fast approaching at lower elevations in the Umpqua Valley, although it is still early for collecting at medium elevations and much too early for high elevations.

Just a few days ago one cone collector reported good-quality, ripe Douglas fir cones from the Tenmile area. He seemed to feel that there was a pretty fair crop locally, although this has not been my observation elsewhere at similar elevations. From what I have seen so far, the Douglas fir cone crop is poor or spotty, the latter meaning only a few trees here and there with ample amounts of cones.

Crop 'Not So Good'
Medium and high elevation reports on Douglas fir say the crop is "not so good," which I would interpret as close to poor. These are early reports which could remain the same or change slightly. More current information will appear in this column later.

High elevation reports label the white pine and sugar pine crops as good. Ponderosa pine in the same areas is reported as fair to good. One report on high elevation white fir reports a good crop.

No prices have been quoted as yet. Chances are that if Douglas fir cones are scarce but of high quality with few worms, they should bring a good price. Nature, however, sometimes adds insult to injury in years of poor crops by allowing borers to take over. Only careful inspection can verify whether or not this is true this year.

Therefore, get out your cone cutter or sharp knife and split lengthwise six to ten cones from the most promising looking trees. Examine the cut seeds in each half section for ripeness, number and insect damage. For those not familiar with cone collecting, cones should be tightly closed and still green in color for the most part.

Test Possible
If the seeds are not milky but are firm and white, like a ripe apple seed, they are mature and ready to harvest. If there are only four ripe seeds without insects showing, the cones are barely worth collecting. Five to six is average, seven to eight good, eight to nine very good, and above this, excellent. If the count is good to very good, you can even tolerate insects.

Buyers have not made themselves known yet, but probably will shortly through newspaper, radio, TV or word of mouth. If the Forest Service buys cones, as it usually does, it will probably buy through the nearest ranger station. Private companies will very likely continue to buy through local stores, businesses or individuals.

In any case, buyers will probably want cones from only certain elevations. So, be sure to check with buyers before you begin collecting.

Resident Of Winston Fined On Game Count

Alva E. Matthews, 68, of Winston was fined $25 and $5 costs for hunting during closed season. He appeared in the court of District Judge Gerald R. Hayes.

He was arrested by state police in possession of a deer which he said he shot accidentally between 2 and 2:30 a.m. Aug. 3, while in the process of "hazing" the deer out of his garden with a 16-gauge shotgun.

He stated he had not intended to kill the animal, but did not have a kill or hazing permit from the Oregon Game Commission.
