EUNICE SHRIVERS, eldest of the President's three married sisters and wife of the director of the Peace Corps, has the same mannerisms and talks with the same pointing gesture of the finger as J.F.K. 1968 Is 'Premature' Says Mrs. Shriver Eldest Sister Of President Kennedy

EDITORS NOTE: This is the first of five profile-interviews of "the other Kennedy women"—President Kennedy's sisters and sisters-in-law. Subject of today's dispatch is Eunice Shriver, eldest of the President's three married sisters.

By HELEN THOMAS
United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy's sister, Eunice, says it would be "wonderful" if her brother, Robert, the attorney general, moved into the White House some day. But she feels that 1968 is premature to think about having a second chief executive in her family.

She also expects the President to win a second term by a much bigger margin than his first time around. As for her husband, R. Sargent Shriver, director of the Peace Corps, "he'd make a wonderful governor" of Illinois but she wouldn't want to see him run in 1964.

Tall, blue-eyed Mrs. Shriver talked frankly and freely about members of the Kennedy clan as political candidates in an exclusive interview with United Press International. She also discussed a subject on which she is becoming a respected authority—mental retardation.

"I think it would be wonderful if Bobby went into the White House," she said. "He's so dedicated . . . has no other interest than government. But '68 is awfully premature to think about. I frankly have never heard him discuss it in my life."

Looks Like President

Mrs. Shriver looks remarkably like the President. She has the same lankiness, the same mannerisms, talks with the same pointing gesture of the finger. There is the same Boston twang and quickness of speech. . .and the same intensity when she gets wound up in her cause.

She is extremely candid and confident. She pitched in with typical Kennedy "vig-uh" to help her brother win the presidency. And she makes no bones about the fact that she thinks he's the right man for the job.

"I really enjoy my brother being president. . .let's face it," she said. "I think he's the most able, creative young man in government that I've ever met and he's the most understanding of what people want for their own happiness. He's terrifically sympathetic.

"I think he's doing terribly well. He's bright and able. He's got a marvelous sense of humor."

She said the President is "more serious now. . .more absorbed" than in the old days.

Does Social Work

The mother of three children, Mrs. Shriver has been no slouch herself at public service. At the age of 41, she can look back on many years of social work with juvenile delinquents, deserted children, and women in prison. Now her burning preoccupation is retarded children.

She is executive vice president of the Kennedy Foundation, which devotes its money to aiding the mentally retarded.

She is far from an armchair executive. The day she was interviewed, at the foundation school in Washington, she took time out to teach her gym class, which she does every Tuesday. The young girls in her group seemed to adore her as she put them through fast calisthenics.

They showed remarkable coordination and their afflictions were not apparent to a casual observer.

Sister Joseph La Namur, head of the school, which is conducted by Catholic nuns, shakes her head in admiration at Mrs. Shriver.

"She's got a lot of push," she said. "She's full of pep. All you need is one person like that. The children love Mrs. Shriver."

Talks Of Sister

Mrs. Shriver was the first to break through the barrier of secrecy surrounding her 44-year-old sister Rosemary. In a magazine article last year, she revealed that Rosemary was mentally retarded and had been put in an institution when she began to "deteriorate."

Up to that time, the subject of the sister was very "hush hush." Now Mrs. Shriver speaks freely, seems to want to, as if to give comfort to others. She also feels ter chance to advance and to know life because of so many new discoveries in the field.

Most Active

Mrs. Shriver is the most active doer on the sister side of the Kennedy family. She makes speeches around the country and she is always popping in and out of the office wing of the White House, mostly in connection with her advisory role on the mental retardation panel.

Formerly residents of Chicago, the Shrivers now live in an elegant home in Rockville, Md., a suburb of Washington. They have a cook, a cleaning woman and a governess.

Rumors that Shriver will run for the Illinois governorship keep popping up, and his wife is not unaware of them. But she says "not in '64. I don't think he wants to. He likes the Peace Corps."

"Perhaps after that," she added, "he'd make a wonderful governor."
