Myrtle Creek Library Assistants Complete Project Centering On National Library Week Observance

Library assistants at Myrtle Creek High School, under the direction of Miss Gore, librarian, have recently completed their latest project which has centered around National Library Week. They were allowed to choose their own medium to spell out the several suggested objectives of this week.

Kathleen Bayless has constructed a bulletin board which was presented in the English III room, stressing NLW's motto — "The Fifth Freedom — Reading — Enjoy It."

On the subject of censorship, Tony Quinn editorialized certain views while representing the editor of a small-town newspaper; Sharon Frazier interviewed an English teacher and a student to combine views.

Recommending books which fit in with certain high school subjects and then setting them to music was the project of Elaine Hornseth. Her tape has been used in various classes.

Surveys were the objectives of Jerri Sims and Sharon Stamey. Through cooperation in the high school English classes, Jerri listed the ten most favorite books in the library, the first three of which are: To Kill A Mockingbird, Gone With The Wind, and Exodus.

Sharon's survey reached into the eighth grade class where she received the answers of twenty-six students to her question, "Why do you like to read?"

Bob Beamblossom completed an extensive research on bibliotherapy—using books as a mental therapy.

Pat Shurtleff compared the NLW movement to that of missionary work; missionaries bring people to a better way of life through religion; the movement brings people to a better way of life by spreading printed work.

The library assistants are given a project approximately every six weeks. Some previous ones have involved constructing charts and pictorial forms of the contributions to libraries from early civilizations, recording introduction of a chosen reference book, and such scholarly work as comparing encyclopedias, dictionaries, indexes, handbooks; in short; reviewing those instruments which aid in using the English language and the library.
