Longer Lasting Surfaces In Improved Wood Siding

For families who plan to revitalize their homes by adding a room there's good news about advanced wood siding that is factory-primed for longer-lasting paint surfaces.

The new factory-priming of wood siding provides scientific control of paint thickness of the vital prime (first) coat. If the first coat on the wood is too thick, there is a possibility the bond may be less than ideal. If the coat is too thin, protection is less than maximum.

Besides providing an excellent base for subsequent field coats for long-lasting beauty, the factory priming of wood siding also offers other advantages.

The prime coat protects the wood until finish paint is applied. Since all surfaces (front, back, edges) are primed, there is extra protection against "wicking action," damage from outside water wind-blown inward.

Highest quality primers are used in the factory. Lower total cost for labor and materials, better finish-coat coverage and longer paint life.

Good construction and finish painting practices need to be followed, of course, if benefits of the advanced priming are to be realized, he explains. Since final coats are applied after the room addition is built, there is complete freedom of exterior color. The color can be selected either to match or to harmonize with the original house.

Primed wood sidings and suggestions for their use are readily available at local retail lumber dealers.

Back Yards' Fine For Family Room

The rear of the house often is the ideal place for a family room. In most cases, if the family room is added at the back of the house, it is separated from the sleeping area and can double with the existing living room as an entertainment area.

Many families prefer to have their new family room addition open off the kitchen or dining room.

In any case, the addition of a family room at the rear of the house will create an "L" shaped structure. The sheltered area between the arms of the "L" makes an excellent spot for a screened patio or terrace, and this outdoor living space often can be arranged so that it connects with the rest of the house with a sliding glass door.

Plumbing Problems Sent Down The Drain

A call to the plumber to open a stopped-up drain need never happen. Such calls can be eliminated, says the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau, by preventive maintenance on the part of the homeowner.

The busiest drain in most homes, where clogging most often occurs, is in the kitchen sink. Watching what goes into the drain and simply pouring hot water down the drain daily are two ways to reduce trouble.

Pour excess grease into a container to be thrown out. Liquid fats are the biggest offenders in drain clogging. They congeal when they contact cool piping and form a film. Coffee grounds and bits of food add to the accumulation until the pipe closes.

A kettle full of hot water poured down the drain once a day, preferably after the supper dishes are done, will dissolve greasy film and remove food particles carried into the drain with the dish water.

Important information of value to the homeowner and the renter, alike, is available in a booklet titled, "Plumbing Care and Repair." It may be obtained for 10 cents from the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau, 35 East Wacker Drive, Chicago 1, Illinois.

Other areas treated in the informative booklet include step-by-step advice on maintenance and minor repairs for fittings, all plumbing fixtures, shower equipment, water heaters, leaking, frozen and noisy piping, and many other subjects.

Even more important, the booklet makes it clear which jobs can be handled by the homeowner and which jobs should be left to an experienced plumbing contractor.
