If You Believe You Are Normal, The Chances Are You're Languid

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (UPI)—A team of psychiatrists said recently that if you think you are a normal married couple, chances are you're "dull."

The team reported to the 119th annual convention of the American Psychiatric Association on a survey of 50 ninth grade boys who proved to be perfectly normal.

Twelve years later, the psychiatrists said, they surveyed these same men and their wives. The couples were well-adjusted and satisfied with their position in life.

"Such a population would promote stability or a firm backbone of the country," said Dr. Jules S.

Golden, associate professor at Albany, N. Y., Medical College and one of the team members.

But he added he had "mixed feelings" about the situation. Golden said he felt the couples' lives were "essentially mundane and dull." They had little imagination and few interests.

Dr. Reuben Silver, a psychologist at the college, and Dr. Nathan Mandel, of the Minnesota Department of Corrections, joined Golden in the survey they made in Minneapolis, Minn.

One of the tests the authors used in their survey was to ask the couples what they would do with $5 million. In general, the couples said they would buy a house or invest the money. This, the psychiatrists, said showed a lack of imagination.
