Growing Detergent Controversy Due For Congressional Hearing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The growing controversy over detergents spilled into Congress today in a hearing on their contribution to water pollution.

Representatives from virtually every group involved in the battle converged on a House subcommittee to tell their side of the story. The panel is conducting a study of the nation's water pollution problem.

Leading the drive for a mandatory change in the type of household detergent now being used were Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., and Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis. They have introduced bills to ban after June 30, 1965, manufacture of any detergent that resists decomposing in sewage systems.

Present-day "hard" detergents have filled water systems and streams throughout the country with mountains of foam. In some communities suds have flowed out of water taps like foaming beer.

The question of whether human beings are harmed by the detergents has not been definitely determined. But it is generally agreed that chemicals in present detergents complicate the problem of sewage treatment, are harmful to some fish, and create unsightly conditions.

Reuss told the House natural resources subcommittee that if the soap industry would cooperate with the government and voluntarily agree to produce soft detergents, "I am all for it." But he said that if a voluntary agreement is not indicated by Aug. 1, when another House subcommittee begins consideration of Reuss' bill, he would expect the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to support his bill.

Says Change Needed
The department declared recently that a new type of detergent was needed. It added, however, that it felt industry should have a chance to do the job on its own.

Most of the industry is opposed to the pending legislation. Among the scheduled witnesses were representatives of the Soap and Detergents Manufacturers Association, an organization containing most firms in the field.

Methodists Eyeing Two-State Merger

SALEM (UPI)—Oregon Methodists have approved a program to study a proposed merger of Oregon and Idaho Methodist Conferences.

Three Idaho ministers, Leon Bolen, Earl Riddle and Wendell Coe, were here Thursday to urge unification at the Oregon annual conference of the Methodist Church.

It was recommended that the study be carried out under the direction of the Idaho Conference and Oregon's coordinating council's executive committee.

Their further recommendations on unification will be presented to the 1964 Oregon and Idaho conferences.
