Oregon CD Moves Into New Offices

SALEM (UPI)—Oregon's civil defense agency enfeebled by the legislature and scorned by the federal government, moved over the weekend into its new headquarters. The new three-member coordinating staff is moving into a 50-by-90 foot office in the basement of the Capitol Building. Teletypes, radio transmitters and telephone lines will be moved into a nearby communications center in a few days. The agency, which included 18 staffers before the legislative cut-back, is moving out of small offices in the finance building. The new offices and communications center cost $36,000. The work was ordered before the legislature slashed the agency's funds and cut it to a three-member coordinating staff attached to the governor's office.

Federal Help Out

As a result of the legislative cut-back, federal authorities refused to authorize matching funds to bolster the state agency. Oregon is the first state to turn its back on civil defense. The city of Portland dropped its CD organization. The Multnomah, Klamath, Lincoln, Deschutes, Lane and Coos County organizations either have been dropped or have been drastically cut back. It was believed a major reason for the loss of federal funds was the fear that if matching moneys were provided in spite of the cut-back, other states would follow Oregon's example and dump the entire program back in the laps of the federal government. Oregon's three member staff isn't expected to be too lonesome in its giant, 4,500 square-foot office. There were indications that at least one other state agency would be moved into the same office space. Only seven of Oregon's 18-member staff remained on the job this week. The others were laid off, or got discouraged and quit. When Sandstrom opened his office this morning, the first day of the 1963-65 biennium, his staff will include radio technician Joseph Vogt and bookkeeper Donna Casey.

Examiner Favors Airline Shutoff At Eleven Cities

SEATTLE (UPI)—A Civil Aeronautics Board examiner has recommended that West Coast Airlines be allowed to discontinue service to 11 cities, Nick Bez Jr., Seattle, president of the airline, said Saturday. Bez added that the CAB would not make a final decision in the matter "for some time to come." He said further hearings would be held and that representatives of cities involved in the proposed discontinuation of service would have a chance to testify. The examiner recommended that service be discontinued to Whidbey Island, Bellingham, and Omak, Wash.; Salem, Burns and Lakeview, Ore.; Cutbank, Shelby, Mont.; Logan and Ogden, Utah; Newport-Toledo, Ore., and Pendleton, Ore. Bez said the examiner also recommended that service to Baker, Ore., be renewed for one year. Service to Bend - Redmond, Ore. Great Falls, Mont., and Oakland, Calif., would be renewed permanently. Service to Olympia, and Ontario-Payette would be renewed for one year under the examiner's recommendation, while service to Sun Valley, Idaho would be renewed for three years.
