Rural School Idea Abolishment Cited

"Replacement of rural school districts by intermediate education districts is potentially one of the most significant actions affecting education" taken by the 1963 Oregon Legislature according to Thomas Rigby, executive secretary of the Oregon School Boards Association. The bill, as it was finally passed, gives to the intermediate districts "broad grants of authority" to provide services to local districts. These services may be paid for by tax levies if they are approved by two-thirds of the local school districts representing a majority of the students within the intermediate district. Rigby pointed out. The original bill limited services to those for which the local districts were willing to contract individually. In addition, the new legislation allows two-thirds of the district boards to petition to have the question of abolishing the county school office placed on the ballot. "Many obsolete statutes" dealing with the county school superintendent were repealed, he added.
