Little River Rd. Oiling Finished

The U. S. Forest Service reports that the Little River Road dust oiling project has been completed after several postponements because of rain.
The work was done during the week, rather than take a chance of interrupting two consecutive weekends.
The oil was provided by Arcadia Equipment Development Center of Arcadia, Calif., a Forest Service service organization. It was applied by Bay Chemical Co. of Tacoma, Wash.
The district ranger said public and logging personnel cooperation during the project was wholehearted.

Wolf Creek Camp Worked Completed
Improvements to Wolf Creek Forest Camp have been completed, reports Bud Jenkins, Little River District engineer.
A reinforced concrete walk was constructed last summer across the top of the dam to provide access to a nature trail. This trail is replete with signs now pointing out both common and scientific names of a variety of forest trees and plants.
At the campground itself, a filtered water system has been installed to provide more than 25 gallons of safe drinking water a minute. A previous water system was inadequate for campground needs. A new source of water was tapped by building a small dam with a sand and gravel filter. In conjunction with it, a 5,000-gallon storage tank, purification and retention system and about 2,000 feet of pipe were installed.
