

Defense Department May Ask Further Boost In Military Pay

WASHINGTON (UPI)—With a $1.2 billion military pay raise about to win congressional approval, the Defense Department already is thinking of asking for a further boost early next year, it was learned here.

Assistant Defense Secretary Norman S. Paul said the pending pay bill will not "solve all the problems," such as "moonlighting" by servicemen who get off-duty jobs to make ends meet, "and extreme cases where enlisted men have turned to relief. But it is going to help," he said.

Paul, Pentagon manpower chief told United Press International that conferences already had started with Army, Navy and Air Force personnel officers on whether to seek a raise again next year.

"I cannot yet tell you whether, or how much," he said. But he was sure Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara would back a new request as early as next January if the pending boost leaves "disparities" in military pay.

"But we must not under any circumstances let Congress feel that it has settled the pay problem," Smedberg said. He said the military have a long way to go to catch up with the raises given civil servants in the last five years.

Although unknown numbers of enlisted men have turned to one form of relief or another to piece-out their incomes "moonlighting" is far more widespread. And it is not confined to military men.

Many officers of the middle ranks with recent experience commanding troops were enthusiastic about the pay hike but did not look for it to be a cure-all for servicemen with financial problems.

There is a "sizable block" in the service just as in civilian life who don't know how to manage their financial affairs regardless of income, said one experienced Army officer. The problem is "one of human nature, not the wage structure."

This officer told of personal experience with young soldiers talked into buying cars, furniture, television sets and washing machines, all on the installment plan. In over their heads, they turned naturally to their service emergency relief organizations for loans or grants.

Christmas comes but once a year

(EVERY AUGUST)

Most people get the Christmas Spirit along about December. But the end of our year comes much earlier. Right now! When we're expected to play Santa Claus and make gifts of our cars (by cutting prices, raising trade-ins and relaxing terms). Why not drop by and tell us which Merc you'd like for Christmas.
