Terror Movie By Robert Wise Combines Haunted House And Fear Of The Unknown

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) —It's been a very long time since a movie has pricked the scalp and produced gooseflesh on the hides of sophisticated movie goers, but there's a new picture almost guaranteed to scare the wits out of Boris Karloff.

It's an old fashioned ghost story titled "The Haunting."

There are no monstrous and disembodied eyes floating around, no side splitters like Godzilla and certainly no Russian agents searching for state secrets.

Producer-director Robert Wise has combined a spooky, menacing house with terror of the unknown to make his point.

The cast is another departure for a scary movie. Julie Harris and Claire Bloom, along with newcomer Richard Johnson There isn't a sign of Peter Lorre or Vincent Price.

"A good terror picture doesn't require live bogeymen," says Wise.

All Know Fear

"Somewhere deep inside all of us there is a residue of fear of the unknown. It probably goes all the way back to primitive days in the night.

"Even in modern times people are afraid of things they don't understand. That's why the villain of 'The Haunting' is never seen. The ghost is just heard and his presence is sort of felt."

Wise, who won an Oscar for directing "West Side Story" a year ago, knows a great deal about making horror movies. He began back in 1943 with "Curse of the Cat People" and "The Body Snatchers."

Since then, however, he has progressed to more subtle terror.

"We didn't bother to build any special effects," he said. "They aren't really necessary. Nothing can be created on the screen that is half as terrorizing as what each individual in the audience is capable of conjuring up for himself.

"We left the atmosphere, the shadows and sound effects convey our terror. And the faces of our actors reflect the horrible possibilities that lurk in the house."

Haunted Hotel

The haunted house itself is enough to give anyone the creeps, even on a bright, sunny day.

Wise and his M-G-M troupe made the picture entirely in England, selecting the Ettington Park Hotel, near Startford on Avon, as the "house."

It makes the "House of Seven Gables" look like a cozy cottage.

"The hotel owners were unhappy that we made it look so menacing on film and threatened to sue," Wise chuckled. "but it is so ominous looking that Claire Bloom and Julie Harris clutched one another in fear the first time they saw it. They didn't want to go in."

Does Wise believe in ghosts and haunted houses?

"Absolutely not," he said, "but I don't deny terror."

Lookingglass Opening Set For Sept. 3

The Lookingglass School is scheduled to open Sept. 3 for a full day's program. Hot lunch will be served the first day.

Mrs. Doris Stanton will teach the first grade, Mrs. Audrey Lockhart the second and Mrs. Luella Bond the third. Mrs. Nadine Harris of Medford, a recent graduate of the Southern Oregon College has been engaged to teach the fourth grade and Earl Peterson, who taught at the Tenmile School last year, will have the fifth grade. The sixth grade pupils will be transported to the Junior High at Winston. Vince McGovern continues as principal of the Lookingglass and the Tenmile schools.

The science research reading program which was pioneered in Mrs. Bond's class last year will be installed in all the grades this year. It is estimated that last year's enrollment of 109 will be approximately the same in the ensuing year. Considerable upkeep work has been done about the buildings and grounds.

Myrtle Creek Opens Sept. 9

The opening of schools in the Myrtle Creek district has been set as Sept. 9, with a full day of school that day and cafeteria service provided. Regular classes will be held. Teachers in the district are required to report on Sept. 5 for two days of orientation.

The high school will have a new principal, Howard Bingham, coming here from Klamath Falls. Myrl Barkhurst will remain at Myrtle Creek High School in the capacity of director of testing and guidance and remedial reading. Barkhurst has been attending summer school at Portland State the past two years.

New at Myrtle Creek High School and at the eighth grade level will be reader-aids in the English classes. This program will be associated with Southern Oregon College and will give the English teachers a chance to offer more composition and theme work to their students. Larger schools in other districts have found reader-aids quite successful.

Supt. Al Neet said he expects the opening enrollment to be around 1,675, which is a little more than last year at the beginning of school.
