Spirited Fight Looms In Senate Over Railroad Strife Legislation

WASHINGTON (U.P.) — A spirited fight loomed in the Senate today over legislation aimed at preventing a nationwide railroad strike Thursday.

Senate leaders planned to call up a measure approved by the commerce committee Friday that would establish a seven-man arbitration board to settle the four-year-old work rules dispute.

The House Commerce Committee was expected to approve a similar bill today. Chairman Owen Harris, D-Ark., said it was hoped the rules committee could act Tuesday and the House itself on Wednesday.

But the threatened Senate fight raised doubts that Congress would be able to enact the legislation before the strike deadline of 12:01 a.m. local time Thursday.

Favors Seizure Power
On the eve of Senate debate, Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., announced that he would seek to give the President power to seize the railroads in the event of a strike.

Javits said he would offer his proposal as an amendment or substitute for the committee bill, which would provide arbitration of the two major issues — firemen's jobs and make-up of train crews — and leave secondary issues to collective bargaining.

Unless the dispute is settled by Thursday, the railroads plan to put the controversial new work rules into effect. The railroad unions have announced they will strike if the new rules are imposed.

Voices Doubts
Javits said the Senate bill's limited compulsory arbitration provision could still fail to settle the dispute.

"The only ultimate assurance that the railroads will operate is the presidential power of seizure," Javits said. "Therefore, the President should be equipped with the full range of powers."

Javits said he had long favored giving the President limited seizure powers as an alternative to compulsory arbitration, which he said "tends to destroy the free process of collective bargaining."

He said he favored the President's proposal to refer the dispute to the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC), which would issue two-year binding work rules pending agreement by both sides. That proposal, Javits noted, "apparently has been shelved."
