

Waterfowl Season Opens In Oregon

Another opportunity opened for scatter-gunners this week when the state-wide waterfowl season gets underway.

Shooting time for October 12 will be at 8 a.m. to correspond to the opening of the general upland game bird season, but the remainder of the shooting days through the season ending on Jan. 5, gunners can start banging away at one-half hour before sunrise to sunset.

On the shooting schedule will be ducks, geese and coots, and American and red-breasted merganser. Hunters are reminded that the snipe season does not start until Oct. 26, and the brant season is not scheduled until Nov. 18. Hunters are urged to check the waterfowl regulations available at all license vendors.

State-wide bag limit for ducks is four per day, eight in possession. This bag limit may be increased by two mallards and the possession by four mallards in Baker, Gilliam, Malheur, Morrow, Sherman, Umatilla, Union, Wallowa and Wasco counties. In other words, waterfowl gunners have a bonus of two mallards in the daily bag, provided they are taken in the above named counties.

The bag and possession limit may include not more than two wood ducks — which is an increase over the one wood duck allowed last year. Only one hooded merganser is allowed in the daily bag, two in possession. Gunners are reminded there is no open season on redheads and canvas-back ducks, so be sure and check your birds before you pull down to bust them out of the sky.

The goose limit is set for three birds per day, and gunners may have six for a two-day limit or in possession. The day's bag may be increased to six birds, providing three are snow geese. Of course, the hunter may take six snow geese for the day's bag. The possession limit remains the same at six birds. This year, also, one Ross' goose will be allowed in the daily bag. Usually very few of these small geese stop in Oregon.

Gunning prospects appear the best for several years according to Chet Kebbe, chief of the game commission waterfowl program. Local ducks and geese have found fair to good water in the marshlands and potholes all summer and nesting is reported good to excellent in most waterfowl producing areas. These are the birds that provide Oregon hunters with the bulk of early season shooting.

From the nesting grounds of the northlands, reports indicate the Pacific Flyway should have an excellent supply of ducks and geese. Fine shooting is the prospect if these flights of birds decide to stay awhile in Oregon. The early pintail flights will give gunners some fine shooting in most areas except on the west side. Klamath and Tule Lakes appear the best bets for pintails, with other marshlands of eastern Oregon providing fair to good gunning.

Although some early shooting will be available on the west side, best hunting is not expected to materialize until late October or early November. This will hold for Willamette Valley hunters, although some gunning will be available on locally produced birds.

As in the past, the popular Sauvie Island game management area near Portland will be a top choice for many hunters. The lower valley area should produce some top opportunities, especially along the backwaters of the Willamette. Gunning for western Canadas around Rickreall south to Fern Ridge should be tops this year, but migrations of these birds seldom appear much before early November.

East of the mountains, hot spots will undoubtedly include the Summer Lake waterfowl area, the Klamath basin, Warner and Lakeview basins, the Columbia basin, and the Ontario-Vale area along the Snake, Owyhee and Malheur rivers. These shooting areas are favorite holdover waterways for ducks and geese and from year to year produce top opportunities.

The opening at Summer Lake should provide some fine shooting for local ducks, white-fronted geese, fair flocks of snow geese, and a few honkers thrown in for good measure. The big flights of snow geese that have made this area famous should be funneling in, reaching a peak around late October.

There should be some top goose hunting in Warner Valley for snows, cacklers, some whitefronts, and honkers. The local hatch of ducks and Canada geese in this area is reported good. Snows should be funneling into the area in good numbers with the peak around late October.

The Lakeview area is noted for fine Canada shooting with good flights of ducks in the marsh areas of Goose Lake. Most hunters here work from pits or blinds in the grainfields throughout the basin. Decoys are a must to bring the big geese within range. Most hunting is on private property, so get permission before venturing into the fields and marshlands.
