

First Lady Meets Morocco's Ruler

MARRAKECH, Morocco (UPI)—Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy was disclosed today to have had a meeting with King Hassan II of Morocco shortly after her arrival here from Athens Sunday night for a three-day private visit.

U.S. Secret Service men said the king, who sent a special jetliner to Athens for the U.S. First Lady, paid a 30-minute call on Mrs. Kennedy in the Bahia Palace where she is staying with her sister, Princess Lee Radziwill.

Mrs. Kennedy and her sister slept late this morning in their suite on the second floor of the palace, which is in the ancient walled section of Marrakech. Moroccan police guarded both the front gate and the back door, which was screened by banana trees.

The First Lady discovered today that the birth of a Moroccan baby and the intrigues of North African strife were getting more attention than her visit here. The city she chose for her "rest" vacation recombined with both merrymaking and the camp of troops.

British Policewomen Find Americans Are Curious About Christine Keeler

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

NEW YORK (UPI)—Three British policewomen who have finished a three week auto tour of eastern Canada and the United States say the one question they were asked most frequently was:

"Now, what about Christine Keeler?"

Police superintendent Jean Stewart of the Lancashire County constabulary said the three developed the pat answer: "She is not in our district."

Their visit was their first to North America and all agreed in an interview before returning home that they would be back just as soon as they could afford the trip.

The initial tour was sponsored by the Lancashire County constabulary and the British Motor Corp., manufacturer of the MG sports car which the police use in their highway patrol work, and with the sanction of the British Home Office.

Started in Canada
They started in Montreal, continued on to Ottawa, Windsor and Toronto, then to Detroit, Cincinnati, Washington, and New York.

"Your country is bigger and better than I thought it would be," said Miss Stewart. She laughed as she added, "You say you've got this, you've got that in America. By golly, you have. And what steaks!"

Their trip was crowded with visits with law enforcement officials—the whole idea was one of furthering good will between the law enforcement agencies of the United States, Canada and England.

But they also met plenty of unofficialdom—a beauty shop operator in Detroit whose informal "Honey" addressed to policewoman, Sheila Crigall, a 27-year-old brown-eyed brunette with six years on the Lancashire force left her aghast.

Short Haircut
"She also cut my hair so short now they'll call me mister," laughed Miss Crigall.

Everywhere they went, Miss Mrs. and Mr. America, seeing them in their trim navy blue uniforms with white shirt and narrow black tie, stopped to talk.

"We got used to hearing that we were cute," said Winifred Cross, 28, auburn-haired and blue-eyed, and a policewoman for nearly eight years. "At first, we didn't know what they meant."

The U.S. custom of saying, "you're welcome" in answer to a "thank you" still amazes them; it isn't the custom in Lancashire, they said. And the American "pleased to meet you," instead of the British "how do you do?" is another expression they're remembering to use on the folks back home.

England's Second Largest

The three are among the 122 policewomen on the Lancashire county force, England's second largest. There are 3,480 men.

Miss Stewart, 51, born near Aberdeen, Scotland, has been in police work 25 years, 12 of them in Lancashire, an industrial part of England on the northwest coast. In its 6,000 square miles, there are 5.5 million inhabitants, she said.

The police superintendent is the highest ranking female officer outside a major metropolitan area, such as London.

The three became policewomen, they said, for assorted reasons: the variety the job offers, the responsibility, working with people, and the fact a woman in England can move up the promotion ladder at the same rate as a man and earns comparable pay.
