

Hopes Brighter For Glendale Fire District

Hopes of Glendale area residents to form a Rural Fire District have been a little brighter lately as renewed interest in the project was stimulated by the act of two unnamed local businessmen.

According to Clyde Marriott, chairman of the Rural Fire District committee of the Cow Creek Valley Development Association, a petition to hold a fire district election ran into a snag when it was found to be lacking in requirements for legal approval. It was earlier hoped the election could be held this month.

In the meantime, a class A, 750-gallon pumper previously owned by the Los Altos, Calif., Fire Department became available for purchase. The truck, which is already equipped with many of the extras, is priced at $3,750, a good buy reportedly because of its low mileage and excellent condition. Rather than see some other community snap up the bargain while the Glendale area was stalled in legal technicality, the previously-mentioned businessmen advanced the necessary where-with-all to hold the truck.

Marriott said today in a report to Mrs. Gerald Fox, correspondent, that he was anxious to get all the needed signatures by the end of this week so that he could go ahead with filing them at the courthouse. All residents interested who have not yet signed are requested to contact Marriott at the Capitol Saw Shop at the Glendale Junction.

FORMATION of a Rural Fire District in Glendale is getting a boost with the appearance in Glendale of the class A used pumper truck pictured above. Two Glendale area businessmen joined to make the down payment to hold the truck until necessary steps are taken to call a fire district election. The truck was delivered to the Glendale Junction and put on display there until bad weather necessitated its being put under cover. It is expected that the presence of the truck will prove a stimulus to securing petition signatures to replace an earlier-circulated but faulty petition. (Fox photo)

Butler, Macmillan Hold Meet In Search For Prime Minister

LONDON (UPI) — Deputy Prime Minister R. A. Butler spent 45 minutes in private consultation with retiring Prime Minister Harold Macmillan today in the Conservative party's continuing search for a new leader.

One week after Macmillan entered a hospital for surgery and announced he was quitting as party leader and premier, Butler appeared to be the likeliest choice among half a dozen contenders. But political observers remained divided on this and some commentators were beginning to suggest sarcastically that the best solution would be for Macmillan himself to remain.

The staunchly Conservative Daily Express trumpeted in a headline, "What a fight—but why don't they bring back Macmillan?"

Macmillan himself, recuperating from a prostatic operation, appeared to be coming both emotionally and physically exhausted by the strain of the leadership crisis. For three days he has been receiving in his King Edward VII Hospital room a steady parade of cabinet ministers and party strategists seeking a way out of the deadlock that apparently has split the party wide open.

With a general election due within the next 12 months, the pressure on the party to come to terms with itself was tremendous.

Sir John Richardson, Macmillan's physician, appeared worried by the demands of the crisis on his patient. He told newsmen today the 68-year-old prime minister was "very tired and this is directly the result of the continuous consultations that have gone on since very shortly after the operation."

Butler emerged smiling from his session with Macmillan but declined any comment other than to say, "there is a lot of work to do."

At least three candidates besides Butler were rated still in the running. They are Science Minister Lord Hailsham, Chancellor of the Exchequer Reginald Maudling, and Foreign Secretary Lord Home.

But London newspapers today agreed for the first time since the race began that the 60-year-old Butler was growing stronger.

Cook Inlet Crash Claims Jet Pilot

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (UPI) — A member of the 317th Fighter-Interceptor Squadron from Elmendorf AFB here was missing and presumed dead when his F102 jet fighter crashed in Cook Inlet, 10 miles southwest of here Wednesday, the Air Force said.

The pilot was Capt. Terry F. Olmsted, 29, East Peoria, Ill. His wife, Shirley, and three young children live here.

Alaskan Air Command officers said Olmsted was making his final approach for landing at Elmendorf, in a formation of four other F102s returning from Tyndall AFB, Fla., where they had competed last weekend in the Air Force's world wide weapons meet.

The team had finished second in the F102 competition and the 317th's commander, Lt. Col. Joseph W. Rogers was the top F102 pilot in the competition. Rogers and three other members of the team had landed prior to Olmsted's crash, three miles offshore.

Fourth Graders Hear Fire Prevention Plea

Fire prevention in the forest was stressed by Arvid Ellson, timber staff assistant for the Umpqua National Forest in a recent talk before fourth grade students at Fullerton IV School. Ellson's appearance was in connection with Fire Prevention Week. Bryce Troy, one of the students, appeared as Smokey the Bear. Program included a question and answer period and presentation of film slides depicting slash burning operations and removal of fire hazards in the forest.

Slides were also shown of forest scenery to illustrate what is lost in the event of a fire.

Democrats Plan To Honor Morse

BEAVERTON (UPI) — Sen. Wayne Morse, D-Ore., was to be honored at a dinner here tonight in observance of his 63rd birthday. It is sponsored by the Washington County Democratic Central Committee.

Morse spoke at the University of Oregon's Charter Day observance in Eugene Wednesday, and said so many students will be trying to enter colleges and universities by 1980 that present institutions should be doubled in size.

He also said there would be need for 1,000 new institutions with a capacity of 2,500 students each.

Morse said, "If people tell me that all we have to do is raise the standards and keep out the crowds of students, I say in answer, 'the standards are already too high.'"

He added, "We are cheating tens of thousands of students now because they lack the means to get a higher education."

Morse, Bend Bulletin Associate Editor Phil Brogan and Dr. Kenneth Swan of the University Medical School, were honored at the Charter Day observance.

Morse's plane was delayed by fog and he missed the 10 a.m. convocation, but spoke at a p.m. assembly.

House Returns To Voting On Civil Rights

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Norris Cotton, R-N.H., charged today that the Kennedy administration inserted the controversial public accommodations section in its civil rights package merely to pressure southern legislators into accepting other sections of the bill.

Cotton said the administration does not really expect Congress to pass the measure, which would outlaw discrimination in restaurants, hotels, lunch counters, motels and other public facilities. He said the law "would be a monstrosity and impossible to enforce."

The House Judiciary Committee returned to voting on sections of its civil rights bill today, beginning with voting rights. Chairman Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., has agreed with Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy that the bill will have to be toned down to win more bipartisan backing.

Kennedy won major support in his drive to soften the bill Wednesday, despite cries of "sellout" from Negro civil rights leaders. As drafted by a judiciary subcommittee the bill is considerably stronger than the administration proposed.

The voting rights section of the subcommittee's bill would cover all municipal, state and federal elections, while the administration's proposal would cover only federal elections.

Two amendments are pending before the committee. One, submitted by Rep. William M. Tuck, D-Va., would throw out the whole section; the other, by Rep. Roland Libonati, D-Ill., would restore coverage to federal elections only.

While Kennedy did not veto the subcommittee's proposal, he was represented as leaning toward the administration's original federal elections only approach.

As Kennedy expected, he was the immediate target of Negro leaders for his stand. Clarence Mitchell, Washington director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), accused him of selling out. He said civil rights forces polled the House and Senate and found enough support to pass the bill the attorney general feared would be defeated.

Barry Lashes Kennedy's Want-To-Be-King Policy

BOSTON, Mass. (UPI) — Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., lashed out Wednesday night at President Kennedy and his administration as "a would-be king and a want-to-be dynasty, not a president and a party."

Goldwater, still denying he is a candidate for the GOP presidential nomination, told a Republican fund raising dinner that the Kennedy administration "deals freely with the enemy" and thereby "deals tragically with the hopes of freedom."

"Even the liberals have to recognize that what we have now in Washington is a would-be king and a want-to-be dynasty, not a president and a party," he charged.

Goldwater told the $100-a-plate dinner audience that the Kennedy administration

"speaks of peace while it misunderstands and undermines the strength which alone can keep the peace."

"This administration speaks of peace while it abandons the cause of freedom, which, unless won, will lose the peace," he said.

The senator charged that what the administration considers victories were in reality steps backwards. He referred specifically to the wheat deal with Russia, the Cuban policy, the nuclear test ban treaty and the Berlin wall.

"What has really happened, of course, is that the Soviet position remains overall a step or two ahead. Move ahead two and go back one. It is an old game they are playing and the New Frontier is playing right along with it."

FIRE CALL ANSWERED

The Glendale city fire truck answered a call to put out a small grass fire on the Bernie Halverson property across from the high school on Monday about noon. Firemen answering the call were under the impression the fire was on the property of the high school with which the city has a special out-of-the-city contract, correspondent Mrs. Gerald Fox reports.
