

U.S. Husbands Squirm Under Microscope

WASHINGTON (UPI) — No one knows for sure whether the American husband is the world's unhappiest man, but there is no doubt he is the most criticized. Experts in social behavior — amateur and professional — keep him constantly under the microscope and describe in millions of words how and why he squirms.

German men consider the American husband a sucker because of the way he handles his money. In Germany many women can't say for sure how much their husband earns because it isn't considered any of their business. They accept whatever housekeeping money they receive and keep their mouths shut.

British men shake their heads in wonderment over the way American men are bullied by their children, especially the teen-agers. "Children in this country," notes the London bureau of UPI, "are more to be feared than the children are seen then heard. When company comes, the children are fed separately." A thorough whacking on the seat of the pants, both at school and at home, is still highly esteemed in Britain as a corrective measure.

Frenchmen cannot understand why Americans work themselves to death to provide things their family doesn't really need. Their most prevalent theory is that the American husband is a sort of voluntary slave — indentured for life to a woman who lashes him periodically with demands for jewelry, expensive clothing and hats she doesn't need. French wives accept as a fact of life that it is possible to cook a meal and dispose of the dishes without the help of enough electric kitchen gadgets to operate a space capsule.

Marries Earlier
The American male plunges into marriage at an earlier age and with less thought than any man on earth. Every behavior expert who studies the situation notes the increasing number of teen-age marriages, and the subsequent high divorce rate. Only seven per cent of the American women in their thirties have never been married. Comparable statistics for Great Britain are 18 per cent for France 28 per cent.

One out of every 4.5 American marriages ends in divorce, the world's highest rate. There is no way to measure the number of men who remain married even though they are unhappy, and, as one philosopher puts it, "leading lives of quiet desperation." Apparently only a small percentage of these men seek the assistance of marriage experts and counselors, and Dr. Paul Popenoe of the American Institute of Family Relations cites the case history of one of them:

"Mr. H. said: 'I put in a full day at the factory and by the time I get home about a quarter to six I am glad to lie down and rest. But my wife meets me at the door and tells me the two kids are driving her crazy and will I please take them off her hands? And will I at the same time vacuum the rug, sweep off the front porch and the sidewalk and bring in the clothes from the line as she didn't have time? It turns out she was in the park with the children all afternoon.'"

Highest in World
The American standard of living is the highest in the world, and American women expect to start enjoying it as soon as they are married, or at least without allowing sufficient time for the husband's income to rise to the level of their needs and wants. Sociologist James W. Gladden of the University of Kentucky got some interesting answers when he conducted a survey among girls on what they expected their husbands to do besides support them:

—Seventy per cent said they expected outside help.

—Eighty-four per cent expected their husbands to straighten up the house occasionally.

—Forty-four per cent demanded that the husband prepare the meals occasionally.

—Fifty-four per cent said they expected their husbands to make the beds, "but only rarely."

—Sixty per cent expected him to dispose of the garbage every day.

Rules Changed
After marriage, a new set of rules apparently is drawn up in the feminine mind, and Dr. Popenoe tells the results of a survey among women in Columbus, Ohio, on what the ideal husband should do. Some of them:

Tell interesting things about his work. Do thoughtful things the wife does not expect him to do. Sense when his wife wants affection and when she doesn't. Clean out the bathtub and wash basin after using them. Appreciate and praise new dishes the wife prepares. Know how to pull the wife out of the dumps when she gets into them. Always telephone when he is going to be late to dinner. Never talk about his former girl friends. Enjoy reading and discussing good books with his wife.
