

Solon Slugs Colleague In Capitol

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Ed Foreman, R-Tex., told the House that Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-Tex., slugged him just outside the House chamber today after first threatening to pistol-whip him.

Foreman said Gonzalez "completely lost his head" in anger over comments Foreman made about Gonzalez' voting record in a speech last weekend at Houston before the Texas Federation of Republican Women.

Foreman, amplifying his account for newsmen, said Gonzalez approached him as he sat in the House during a quorum call and said he understood Foreman had called him a Communist.

Foreman said he replied that this was not correct, but that he had discussed Gonzalez' liberal voting record. Gonzalez shot back that if Foreman ever did make such a charge he would pistol-whip him, Foreman related.

Foreman said he replied, "well, Henry, why don't you get started."

At that he said Gonzalez invited him outside the House chamber.

As they stepped through a door into the speaker's lobby he said Gonzalez swung at him, striking his right shoulder.

Foreman said he was not hurt and that he did not retaliate. Instead he told reporters he admonished Gonzalez as follows:

"Henry, I believe you have lost your mind. I can't imagine an intelligent adult and a member of Congress doing a thing like that."

Foreman said he then stepped back into the House chamber and Gonzalez left. Gonzalez was not immediately available for comment.

Foreman is a 29-year-old freshman member, the House's youngest. Gonzalez is 47 and came to the House midway in the last Congress. Foreman is among the most outspoken of House conservatives. Gonzalez has voted generally with the liberal bloc.

Foreman has been touring the country during lulls in House business calling for election of conservatives. He has been in 30 states so far.

Most recently he tangled with Rep. W. Donlon Edwards, D-Calif., a freshman member of the liberal bloc, assailing him in his home district as a "pinko." He apologized after Edwards threatened to sue him.

Penny Station Is Coming Down

NEW YORK (UPI) It was a cross between a Roman bath and a Greek temple. Artists and designers for years had argued whether it was an architectural masterpiece or a monstrosity.

But for more than a half a century it had been a familiar landmark to untold millions of New Yorkers and visitors from all over the world.

Tuesday the artistic merits or demerits of the world's busiest railroad station became academic.

At 9 a.m. Monday the first of the electric jackhammers started tearing into the stone and granite that formed the imposing facade of famed Pennsylvania Station.

The columned grandeur of the old building will be no more, but the station will remain. It will be rebuilt from the ground up.

The underground railroad station will be topped by a 33-story modernistic skyscraper and a new $70 million Madison Square Garden sports center.

The facelifting will be carried out despite protests from architectural devotees and others interested in preserving the 53-year-old landmark.

Officials of the Pennsylvania and Long Island Rail Roads, the construction and demolition firms and the head of the Madison Square Garden corporation watched as workers atop the main entrance staked and trussed up one of the six stone eagles that have perched there since 1910.

A giant crane lifted the 5,700 lb. eagle and then lowered it to the street where it glowered imperiously at the destroyers of its imperial nest.

The five other giant birds are scheduled to join it soon in a 21st Street parking lot for temporary storage.

The lower levels of the station still will serve 200,000 passengers on 550 daily trains. The train service will continue during the demolition and new construction.
