The artist purposely spelt that word "sole" wrong—he thought that another variation in spelling the word was necessary to impress on the public's mind the individuality of our shoes—the superb qualities and values we give in OUR footwear.

We give the soul of good workmanship and leather, in both the sole and uppers in ONR shoes.

Our soul idea is to please you and retain your trade. That's the soul of our business policy.

PROGRAM BY STUDENTS AT ENGINEERING CLUB

At the Engineering Club Friday evening, L. E. McCoy told of his experiences while working for the Portland General Electric Co. He described in detail several accidents to the system, and the work in the station getting things in order again.

F. T. Struck explained many of the uses which are made of an ordinary carpenter's square in building construction. He also told how to bore a square hole with a round bit. George Poysky, president of the club, concluded the program with a description of the various schemes for catching salmon, such as the seine operated from shore, the purse seine, fish wheel, etc. He also described in detail the method of canning salmon.

The Engineering Club will have its picture taken for the Oregonian early next week. Notices will be put on the bulletin boards.

SENIORS WILL SUBMIT THESE IN CONTESTS

A number of the seniors of the University of Oregon will probably make their theses do double duty this year by using the material in them in preparing essays for the competition for the conservation prizes and the Bennett prize.

The material in a number of the theses in the Department of Economics is well adapted for the preparation of such essays, and all that those entering the contest for the prizes will be compelled to do, is to revise their theses so that they shall conform with the rules governing the competition. Both the Bennett and the conservation prizes offer excellent inducements, not only to seniors, but to students in the undergraduate classes as well.

FINE TALK AT Y. M. C. A.—
 WILL GIVE A BANQUET

Emphasizing the idea of religious tolerance and kindly consideration for those of other doctrines and beliefs, Professor Dunn last night gave one of the most helpful and practical addresses that have been given before the men's meeting this year. The discussion seemed to be particularly appropriate at this time, owing to the recent disturbances over ideas of difference and denomination, and was very thoroughly appreciated by the good crowd of men who gathered to hear the address.

At the time of the dedication of the city Y. M. C. A., probably in two weeks, the University Y. M. C. A. is planning to give a big banquet for the men of the school in the new banquet hall of the city building. The idea is to make the event one of informality and good fellowship, and an effort will be made to dispose of at least one hundred and fifty tickets. The plates will be sold at a very reasonable price, so that the finances will not prevent any man from attending. It is planned to have several out of town men here on that occasion, men who are known throughout the state and the coast for their interest in Y. M. C. A. work. A program of several good musical numbers and a few short toasts is being arranged.

Kentucky once upon a time had a mustache club, consisting of three members of the senior class.

Princeton's football training will consist of cross country running.
