TRI-STATE WILL ARGUE SHIP SUBSIDY PROBLEM

Ray and Zimmerman Will Stay Here to Meet Washington

The next contests along the forensic line will be the triangular debates held March 31st simultaneously at the Universities of Washington and Oregon and Stanford University.

The debate at Eugene will be between Oregon's affirmative team, composed of Ray and Zimmerman, and a negative team from Washington. Collier and Motschenbacher, who compose Oregon's negative team, will debate at Stanford.

The men are training strenuously for the contests. Every evening the two teams are pitted against each other by Coach Buchen, and they are learning to present every aspect of the ship subsidy question. "If thorough preparation will win," says Mr. Buchen, "we have the victory."

As this is the first year that Stanford has debated the colleges of the Northwest, the contest at Stanford will be especially interesting. The contest at Villard Hall will attract attention, because Oregon will be again pitted against her northern rival, the University of Washington.

Last year debate was the only activity in which Oregon defeated Washington, and it was the only activity in which she won a Northwest championship. According to those in close touch with the debaters, she will repeat the performance again this year.

Several spelling classes have recently been organized at Wellesley.

ENGINEERING CLUB SEEKS RECOGNITION

Edward J. Himes Tells of Plans for Hawthorne Avenue Bridge

The Engineering Club met last night in Deady Hall and listened to a short, but interesting, program. The principle business of the evening was a discussion of the advisability of asking for recognition by the American Institute of Civil Engineers. The club feels that if the proposition is taken up in the proper way it will be able to receive the same recognition as other institutions of the same standard. It is hoped that the members of the faculty who are affiliated with the American Institute will use their influence to present the name of the University Engineering Club to the national society.

The principal number on the program last night was a talk by Edward J. Himes on the construction of the Hawthorne Avenue bridge, in Portland. He explained the method of construction of the piers and also the operation of the lift span.

The second number was an address by J. Lewis Johnson on the methods of stream measurements, including sounding, location of details, and quantity of water in river.

The picture of the Engineering Club taken recently on the Library steps was shown. Those who desire one can give their order to J. P. McGuire.

TROUBADOURS "BEAT IT" WHEN NOT APPRECIATED

A few days ago "Sap" and Ralph decided, by a process of induction and deep reasoning, that they had music in their souls; also it tingled in their finger tips and a little, a very little, was evident in their vocal chords.

With another seance of mighty pondering they came to the conclusion that a thing of beauty was a joy forever, and that it should be shared with the civilized world. The Gamma Phi Betas were chosen to be first showered with this great blessing. Accompanied by a guitar, a banjo and the aforementioned vocal chords, plus tingling finger tips, the indomitable duo started and arrived. Slowly the magnificent chords of the basses rose into the air until they reached the house tops, when lo, the heavens opened wide—or was it the window?—and liquid refreshment descended in torrents, or possibly in tubfuls. There was an exclamation of some kind, a rending and a snap, the tension has slackened, the last chord is done, and the crestfallen troubadours, wiping the moisture from their brows, silently beat into the darkness.
