The All-Northwest Team.

Our friends at the University of Washington seem to be attempting to dominate the selection of the All-Northwest football team for 1911, as they try to dominate all intercollegiate affairs. At this instance the Washington Daily takes a fall out of Pat McArthur, whom, it says, picks a "joke" team for Spaulding's guide book each year.

The Daily goes on to say that McArthur is especially fond of Latourette, Oregon's quarterback, whom he has in years past placed on the All-Northwest team, and that he will undoubtedly attempt to do the same thing this year, even in the face of Coyle's recognized superiority.

Had The Daily taken the trouble to look into Spaulding's Guide for 1911, it would have seen that All-Northwest teams were chosen, not by McAlister, but by three Spokane men, Roscoe Fawcett of the Spokane Inland Herald, J. W. Colver of the Spokane Spokesman Review, and George Varnell of the Spokane Chronicle. Two of these men, Fawcett and Varnell, gave the coveted honor to Latourette, and one, Colver, gave it to Coyle; which seems to show that Latourette's superiority was recognized even within Washington's own territory.

It may be of interest to The Daily to know that McArthur will not choose a team this year, even though he has been asked to do so by many fans of the great gridiron game. But suppose he did choose one, and did place Oregon's quarterback on the team, has The Daily any reason to say that his selection would be a joke? Those who saw the Portland game, know that Latourette managed the Oregon team in the best possible way it could be handled, but no one who watched the antics of Washington's great coach, as he stamped up and down the side lines, and the frequency with which Coyle glanced at him, will say that Coyle's mind managed the Washington team. It is true that Coyle outkicked Latourette that day, partly because the Oregon line did not hold the Washington men so as to give Latourette time to kick in form, and partly because of the latter's weak ankle. In other games the punting of the two men has been about equal. As to running back points, there can be no comparison; Coyle was downed almost within his tracks most of the time, while Latourette managed to evade what looked like the whole Washington team and carry the ball back for big gains.

Oregon believes that Main, Kellogg and Latourette are all deserving of Northwest honors this year, and would be very much pleased to see them honored.

THE SAGE OF PODUNK

A fellow landed in Cottage Grove the other day by mistake. He took a bottle of carboic acid to get out.

There is usually "dough" concerned in every "uplift" movement.

Every dog has his day and the cats have kittens.

Spare the turkey and save the child.

Go to bed with the chickens and you will probably wake up roosting with the geese.

DOBIE SAYS WASHINGTON IS IN CLASS WITH BIG FOUR

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—"Washington could probably beat Michigan, Chicago, Illinois, Notre Dame and throw a big scare into Minnesota," said Coach Gilmour Dobie in a recent interview, giving out his first optimistic statement this year. "I did not know myself what a good team I had until I saw Washington wallop Oregon last Saturday, and that game convinced me that we would have a good show against the "big four" teams.

That does not mean, however, that we are going to have a cinch with Pullman next week," said the coach, not yet willing to give his optimism full sway. "I figure a score of about 5 to 0."
