CONCLUDING ARTICLE

Organization and Co-operation in System of Graduate Coaches Will Win—Says Pat.

Portland, Ore., Dec. 3, 1911.

To the Editor:

Oregon's present system of football coaching is admittedly a failure and those who have given the subject serious consideration are of the opinion that our only salvation lies in the adoption of the graduate coach system. This system works satisfactorily in some of the institutions of the East and Middle West, as well as at Stanford and California, where alumni stars have done the coaching for eight years.

It is argued in favor of the Alumni coaches that the professional element is removed and that the old "grads" who come back to the campus every autumn come because they love their Alma Mater. In the selection of these graduates, character and standing count as much as knowledge of the game, and there is little or no chance of having a rowdy in charge of the 'varsity squad. This statement is not intended as a reflection upon our recent coaches, for we have been singularly fortunate in having good, clean men to direct our gridiron activities, but under the graduate system, only men of known integrity and character will be selected.

Eastern coaches are usually high-priced and a small college like Oregon can hardly afford to have more than one of them at a time. As a result, this one man is expected to direct the team's play, as well as give individual instruction to various candidates; sometimes, perchance, he has an Oregon alumnus for an assistant, but the Oregon man knows little or nothing of the style of play taught by the head coach and general confusion results. No one coach can direct his team's general play and at the same time give individual instruction, so the candidates for guard, tackle, half-back, etc., are forced to pick up the "fine points" of their positions as best they can, and are frequently lacking in the rudiments of the game—tackling, falling on the ball, catching punts, etc.

No team can win in the long run unless its members know football "from the ground up," and, for this reason, a staff of three or five graduate coaches, properly organized, can do more toward developing a winning team than can the best and most celebrated Eastern star. If the Oregon team of next season is placed in charge of three alumni coaches—an end, a back, and a lineman—there will be a different story to tell when Oregon faces Dobie's crew. One of these three men should be designated as head coach and his word should be law, not only with the players, but also with the other coaches. Additional alumni could be brought back from time to time to help along where they could do good, and the whole staff could work in harmony and for the best interests of Oregon. These alumni coaches, especially those who would constitute the regular coaching staff, should be compensated for their time and trouble, for none of the Oregon football men of former days are rich enough to spare three months each year for coaching without compensation. However, the sum total paid to the regular coaches need not exceed the sum paid to the head coach this year.

Under the graduate coaching system, there should be a proper division and allotment of the work and a perfect organization. If the first team demands the undivided attention of the three regular coaches, additional instruction should be provided for the second team, for every candidate for gridiron honors should be and is entitled to instruction in the details of the position to which he aspires, as well as in the rudiments of the game.

The "Oregon spirit," which won so many games in former days, will bring the old warriors back if Oregon decides to call them. There are a score of old-timers who are available and who will be glad to respond. Some

REFERENDUM CASE TO GO TO SUPREME COURT

Ruling Will Be Handed Down In
Judge Galloway's Court Before Holidays.

The arguments in the University referendum case have been brought to a close and Judge Galloway has promised a ruling before the Christmas holidays, which is being anxiously awaited by the people throughout the state. At the end of the trial it was reported in the courtroom that whichever way the decision goes, it will be appealed to the Supreme Court, so the case is not likely to be definitely settled for several months.

The end of the trial was marked by several brilliant speeches by the opposing legal talent. Judge Slater in opening the arguments for the plaintiff, after the temporary postponement of the case last week, compared the defenders of the fraudulent circulators with the defense of the McNamara brothers in Los Angeles and scored H. J. Parkison, who supervised the circulation of the petitions, claiming that he is responsible for at least 10,000 names, many of which have been proven forgeries. In the closing arguments Judge Martin L. Pipes masterfully outlined the story of the origin of the movement to invoke the referendum.

Judge Pipes said, in part: "It (the referendum against the University) was not instituted for the purpose of using the referendum power of the whole people. The movement was started by parties who made up a purse to fight the University that they might compel Eugene to quit fighting the county of Nesmith. I think Cottage Grove is now ashamed of her part in the bad business and is trying to make her part in it good.

Their first move was to employ Parkison, who held no honest views of opposition to the University. He went into it to make a little money. He then went into the dives of the north end in Portland and employed crooks—no more fitting place could be found to employ men to fight education. If other interests are backing him, all are guilty."

demonstrated in Ogden's descriptive pianologue, "Jack Dalton and the Papers," of which he is the composer. Still another original feature is the "Indian War Dance," which will be introduced, and which is the work of a student at the Chemawa Indian School.

of them are "has beens," but a large majority of them have played under the "new" rules and some are just as good football men as can be found anywhere. A few of them live in Eugene, and will be glad to devote their spare time to the upbuilding of Oregon football. If the spirit on the Oregon campus is as good today as it was when the writer was a student, the graduate system will prove the wisdom of its choice. Much depends upon the attitude of the students, particularly the football men. If the graduate system degenerates into a scramble for the honors by representatives of the fraternities, or if it proves the means of playing petty college politics, then the system should be given no satisfaction. The alumni are unselfish in their devotion to their Alma Mater and if, after due deliberation, the Athletic Council decides to call the old fellows back to do the football coaching, there will be a lot of hard, earnest effort to put out a team that will, at least, make a creditable demonstration of its ability to play the game.

Oregon has good material and more coming on and there is no reason why we should play second fiddle to Washington or allow Multnomah to overwhelm us. If the graduate system proves successful, then we will have something permanent and will know "where we are at." If we continue our present policy, we will never be able to get out the rut that we are following.

SANTA CLAUS TO VISIT VARSITY GERMAN CLUB

On Tuesday evening, at the Men's Dormitory, the German Club will give its annual Christmas party. The committee is planning to make it more entertaining this year than ever before. Among the attractions will be a Christmas tree, from which gifts will be distributed to all. Each member is requested to bring a present not exceeding ten cents in value. A short musical program will be rendered, and after this refreshments will be served. All members are urged to be present.

William Williams, '10, is with the General Electric Co., Schenectady, Pa.

Frederick S. Lafferty, Law, '91, represents Oregon in the House of Representatives.
