UNIVERSITY IS SUBJECT OF OREGONIAN ARTICLE

Big Daily's Correspondent Writes of the University as a Valuable
State Asset.

Appearing in the Sunday Oregonian for March 10, was an article by Addison Bennett, special correspondent to the Oregonian, on the subject of "The University of Oregon."

This is the first of two articles, the second of which will appear next Sunday. It will deal with the early history and growth of the institution, as well as with the character of the departments and their work. A comparison of Oregon's expenses with those of similar schools and a description of college life, customs, and organizations, will also be given.

Concerning the early history of Oregon, little is said. The story of "Lish" Applegate and his $15,000 subscription that turned the tide of fortune toward Eugene, and not Monmouth, as the location of the University, is retold. How this town character, nearly penniless, "subscribed" the required amount to satisfy the legislative demand for a subscription of $50,000, after the committee had collected commodities to the amount of $35,000 in the shape of horses, lumber, and days of labor.

Much of the article is taken up with a statement regarding the needs of the University. Mr. Bennett explains that our college is not a high or "prep" school. That our "assets" are at the mercy of laws, and he dwells upon the efficient work done by the different departments, especially the correspondence and summer schools.

After mentioning these facts, and noting the character of the people to whom the aforementioned schools cater, the industrial and working class, he speaks of Eugene as an "orderly city," and its appropriateness of its selection for a college town, also of the loyalty of Portland to the Varsity. Although Mr. Bennett does not treat these subjects in the order given here, yet they proceed the main point that he makes, which is the lack of information which the voters have concerning the needs, the work, and the relative cost of this institution and other state universities.

Finally, in confirming his contention that the voter should, before hastily injuring referendum petitions, determine the cost of maintenance of this and other universities, he quotes figures that show the cost per capita of maintenance is at least $75 lower than in other states where separate liberal art and agricultural schools exist.

The future of the University, its society and manner of living, will be treated in next Sunday's Oregonian.

Washington Tennis Notes.

With the opening of the tennis season not far distant, tennis men at the University of Washington are beginning to plan for the season's work. One first class double asphalt court will be built as soon as the exact location of the new athletic field is determined. One of the four dirt courts now used will also be put in shape.

George Febiger is the only member of last year's team now in college, but Redman, and Talbot, who represented Washington in previous years, have also returned, while the freshman class contains some very promising material. Beside the tournament with Oregon, meets will probably be arranged with the Seattle and Tacoma clubs, University of Puget Sound, and probably Broadway High School.

SPRING TRACK WORK IS WELL UNDER WAY

Several Point winners must be Developed to Take Place of Missing Men.

Preliminary track work is progressing nicely, a number of men are out each afternoon conditioning themselves either at lacrosse or by indulging in light track work. As soon as the basketball season is over, Trainer Hayward will devote his entire time to the track men.

Although prospects for a strong team are bright this year, a number of places will have to be filled. In the jumps Oregon is extremely weak, and Kay, last year's sprinter, will not turn out for track this season. McConnell, the premier half miler of the Northwest, is not in school this year. McDaniels and Elliott will be missed on the relay team. There are a number of candidates for each of these positions, but they are practically all inexperienced men and it will be difficult to develop them into point winners in one season.

A grammar school and high school meet will be held in connection with the indoor meet April 3. The preliminaries of the grammar school meet will be held on Saturday, March 30. The High School will compete against the Freshmen in several events.

SIGMA CHI WILL OFFER TREAT AT COUNTY FAIR

The manager of the Sigma Chi concession at the Y. W. County Fair has received the following telegram from the principals who will take part in the Sig attraction, Saturday night.

The disciples of the 20th century terpichorean art have been procured at great cost, and will be high salaried head liners at the charity benefit.

The following telegrams were received at the Sigma Chi House this afternoon:

San Francisco, Calif.,
March 12, 1912.

Sigma Chi, Eugene, Ore.:
Mike Maloney and Mme Lorraine De La Mulligan will arrive at 12:32 Saturday to present "The Grizzly Bear" and "Rag With No Name," Saturday night at the County Fair.

HUKE McGLUKE, Mgr.,
920 Pacific Street.
Austin, Texas, March 12, 1912.

Sigma Chi, Eugene, Ore.
Mustang Peet and Bar "X" Cary, with their attraction, the "Texas Tommy," finish engagement here at the "Last Chance Thirst Emporium." Will arrive in time for performance Saturday night. Reserve suite at the Osburn and put in order for spring lamb and plenty of hop essence.

TONY MULDOON (Mgr.),
The Artesian House.

Not Guilty.

However much I might be flattered by the imputation, modesty compels me to state that I had nothing whatever to do with the article in the current Oregon Monthly, signed "X. Y. Z." Whatever I write I sign.

According to statistics thirty-eight per cent of the students at the University of North Dakota earn all of the money necessary to put themselves through college.

The University of Washington Pedagogues have taken well to the idea of a baseball game with the Pullman faculty this spring, and feel confident that they can trim the "major league nine of farmer-teaching tutors." The Washington faculty team has a record of two straight annual victories against the alumni balltossers, and this year is out strong for the faculty championship of the state.

Ira Courtney, University of Washington sprinter, will try for the Olympic team at the coming tryouts on the Stanford oval.

One thousands students of Kansas University are self-supporting.

Plans have been made at Yale to construct a new baseball cage, which will be large enough to contain a diamond of regulation size. It will be high enough for an ordinary fly making infield work possible.

Mrs. Slater and Miss Edna Slater have been spending the week at the Beth Reah House as guests of Anita Slater.
