OLD WORLD COMEDY REVIVED IN 1912

ARISTOPHANES' "CLOUDS" IS LISTED FOR NOVEMBER 15.

College Instructors Enthusiastic—Details of Production True Historically.

(By Russell Calkins.)

Think of it! A comedy that has kept the old world laughing for 2,000 years. Way back in the past when Athens was at the height of her glory, a young fellow by the name of Aristophanes wrote a comedy on Greek life, entitled, "The Clouds."

The Greeks laughed over it and from that time, this play has carried lighthearted merriment down through the ages.

This comedy typifies the Greek idea of a good time, when the country was at peace and the people flocked to the Temple of Dionysus to celebrate the harvest of abundant crops. The Greeks are taking a holiday and as college students are wont to entertain themselves in an idle hour by laughing at impersonations of their instructors, so we find here the teacher Socrates held up in a very ludicrous manner.

Professor Straub of the department of Greek Literature, and Professor Dunn, of the department of Latin Literature, are especially enthusiastic over the presentation of this play.
Professor Straub said, "It is a fine opportunity to present to students of the classics a living picture of Greek life, and to give everybody a better idea of the wide scope of Classical Literature."

Professor Dunn said in regard to play, "Many students of Plato, Socrates, Herodotus, or Sophocles, have become familiar with the fertile intellect of the Greek without catching a glimpse of his love for jest which this play brings out."

A strict adherence to Greek manners and customs even down to the minutest detail, is planned wherever practicable. The rostrum of Villard Hall will present the front of the Greek Theatre with its heavy marble columns and massy doors. The door at the right will swing open at the beginning of the play and the inside will present the semblance of a Greek house. As the plot advances, the big double doors of the center open and a movable stage will be pushed slowly forward until it stands well out from the facade of the theatre. The costumes of the actors and chorus, as well as the peculiarities of acting, will present much that will be both odd and instructive.

WASHINGTON WOMEN FORM SWIMMING CLASS

Co-ed aquatics are the latest thing for the physical training of the woman at the University of Washington. A hundred have signed up for the course, which will be given at a Seattle natatorium, under the direction of a competent director.

In connection with the regular gymnasium work that is required of every co-ed, a course in rowing has been arranged that may be substituted for the "gym" work. Last year the faculty abolished co-ed rowing on account of the lack of facilities, but this year the women have a new building set aside for their use, and hours have been prescribed when they are to have possession of the university rowing equipment.

Elliott Roberts, '14, is visiting in Salem during the week-end.
