

H. M. FISHER CREATES NEW CHRYSANTHEMUM

Immense Flower Is a Hybrid, Says Gardener—May be Named for Mrs. E. B. Piper.

The University's campus policeman, gardener, and general superintendent of public improvement, Mr. H. M. Fisher, has not only distinguished himself as an executor of nature's laws, but has also made himself known as a man of exceptional originality and industry, the reason being that he has produced a wonderful new variety of chrysanthemum.

The garden spot is the flower bed back of the Dormitory on which that appealing little sign, "Touch not, fondle not, PLUCK not," is placed. The stalk of the flower is nine feet high and the diameter of the blossom is nine inches. The flower is of a sort of pink shading down to a purple center, and is pronounced by all who have seen it, as an unusually beautiful specimen.

The flower is without name, says Mr. Fisher, as it is a cross or hybrid of two different specimens. When asked, how and by what means did he grow such a wonderful flower, Mr. Luther Burbank-Fisher denied any honors in the attainment at all, and says that it is all due to the wonderful soil in which the flower was planted. As to a name, Mr. Fisher says, it will likely be named after the wife of the assembly speaker Wednesday, Mrs. E. B. Piper.

CAMPAIGN CLOCK SHOWS AMOUNT HALF RAISED

With less than one-half of the students canvassed, the Y. M. C. A.'s finance campaign clock stands this afternoon at $105.

The leaders in charge of the canvass are confident that the $200 which the Association needs, can be raised. Alpha Tau Omega and Kappa Sigma led so far in the amounts contributed by houses, although Phi Delta Theta, Avava, Zeta Phi, and the Dormitory have not yet been solicited.

"The hearty support that the students are giving the Association is gratifying," said Treasurer Collier this morning.

EDGAR B. PIPER IS FIRST SPEAKER IN SERIES

Journalism, the endowment of a great School of Journalism in Columbia University by Joseph Pulitzer, one of the world's greatest editors. He said: "The old type of journalism was haphazard, but newspaper work has now become highly systematized; our pioneer editors usually stepped out from their newspaper work into some great public office, but now the newspaperman must stick to his job.

He eulogized Henry M. Stanley as the greatest reporter in the history of America, and gave a brief outline of his life. Other great newspapermen, as Horace Greeley, William Seward, Charles Dana, Whitelaw Reid, and James Bennett, and their rise to prominence in this work were spoken of by Mr. Piper.

Mr. Piper's requirements for a good reporter were, character, energy, industry, honesty, perseverance, and a keen interest in public affairs. He said: "The newspaper deals with life; the reporter is the eye and ear of the newspaper, and therefore the reporter must seek life, and be in sympathy with what is going on around him. Personality—the ability to meet people, he also gave as a necessary asset to the highest success.

On the getting of the news, Mr. Piper laid the greatest importance in reportorial work, and in this he gave the five "W's"—Who, What, When, Where, Why, as the essentials for a complete, full, satisfactory news item. He said no better example of a high standard of reporting could be found, than the miracle of the blind man, to be found in the ninth chapter of the Book of John, in the Bible.
