AND ON THE SEVENTH DAY—

Sunday means a variety of things to Oregon students. Many use it to make up back work. Others spend it lounging around the house, reading the papers, smoking, talking, or simply killing time.

Sunday is primarily a day of rest and recreation. The Sabbath was made for men, not man for the Sabbath. No matter what the theologians will tell you, this break in the week's toil was designed fundamentally to keep men from getting stale, physically, mentally, and spiritually.

Did you ever stand on the hills east of Eugene at sunset and watch the endless change of colors in the western sky? Or have you ever floated down the Willamette on a bright Sunday morning and listened to the rustle of the water through the yellow-stemmed willows on the bank?

You haven't experienced any of these? Then you have missed the best part of your life at Oregon. So get out in the open. And don't be selfish about it. Take her along,—that is if the other fellow doesn't beat you to it.

Of course, it doesn't have to be a "she." Take your pal, or the man you most want for a pal. If a day's hike to the Coburg hills doesn't get you closer to him, nothing will. But get outside. If Pen-Hellenic won't let you be gone all day, go in the afternoon and come back when the stars are peeping out, and if, as you climb the last hill and the town comes into view bathed in the remaining colors in the west, you don't catch a deep breath and get a glimmering realization of what life really is, your case is hopeless.

of the dead leaves still underfoot in the deep woods and the whisper of the wind through the pines, doesn't give you courage and strength for the new week, no religion preached in churches will help you.
