VOTE IT DOWN

The Emerald believes emphatically that the real, unperturbed sentiment of the majority should prevail in all Student Body affairs. But we oppose with equal earnestness the influencing of that sentiment by deception and juggling of terms.

If the Junior class should come to the Student Body and frankly ask for a donation to the Oregana, it would be acting entirely within its rights. But when that class, or some of its members, attempt to slip their request for charity by the Student Body under the pretense of collecting an honest debt, we are moved to "call" them.

The amendment proposed at last Wednesday's meeting provides that the Student Body shall in the future "pay for the space" devoted to its enterprises in the Oregana. As a matter of fact, any appropriation which may be made under this amendment, should it carry, will be a gift, pure and simple, so long as the Oregana remains under Junior control.

The Student Body will not rightfully owe one cent to the next Oregana, any more than it is indebted to last year's Oregana or any of the others. By an established custom, here and elsewhere, those enterprises which are strictly Student Body enterprises, conducted by and for the benefit of all, are given free representation in the annual—that, in fact, is the function of the book. Private activities, those which are conducted independently by part of the students, such as fraternities and class societies, are charged for their space, however, worthy their aims and performances.

If the distinction is not maintained, and everybody is to be charged alike, perhaps the present management will try to collect from the faculty for the space used in its exploitation. And who is to pay for the "feature" department, which is the most popular section of the book? Perhaps the victims of the jokes will be assessed so much per joke.

Classes have come and gone at Oregon since the year-book was established as a Junior publication, and each has been glad and proud to shoulder the responsibility without shoulder the responsibility without relief. The class of 1914 partially made up a large deficit. The class of 1915 is doing the same. If the Junior class really believes in the justice of the Student Body's "paying for its space," it ought to insist that these two classes be paid first, since their claims have priority, and their problems are actualities and not imaginary bugaboos of the future.

But the Juniors can stand on their own feet and put out a creditable Oregana. According to the manager's own figures, submitted to the Student Council committee Tuesday night, allowing for all emergencies, the greatest possible deficit which the class can incur is $380. It now has $75 in the treasury. At a most conservative estimate, it should clear $120 on Junior Week-End. This leaves a deficit of less than $200 to be made up by class dances, the class play, or a moderate class tax.

Even should there be a deficit of this size, the class can better afford to defray it than the Student Body, in its present crippled financial condition. But, with the right effort on the part of the class, there need be no deficit at all. This is what those who have had experience on past Oreganas say. And then what would the Juniors do with their present from the Student Body? They might use it in padding the Oregana, a proceeding which, under the present financial situation, the students have generally condemned—or perhaps they might declare dividends at the end of their course.

The Emerald believes that the original resolution favoring an Oregana appropriation was successful because its advocates deluded the underclassmen into fancying that the Oregana was on the verge of financial ruin—that without Student Body aid there might be no book at all. That a large number of students have changed their view on investigating the actual facts is shown by the almost evenly-divided vote on Wednesday's resolution. We believe that if the proposed amendment is considered on its merits, it will be defeated.

By Mandell Weiss.

The "Newly Married Couple," a two-act drama by Bjornson, the Norwegian dramatist, will be presented March 13 at the Lincoln High School by Professor Reddie, Ralph Ash, Mrs. J. Frederick Thorne, Beulah Stebno and Marion Tuttle. This will be the first presentation of this play in Portland. The proceeds from the play will go toward the establishment of a scholarship fund for students graduating from the Lincoln High School.

"Pantaloon," a one-act playlet by Barrie, will act as a curtain raiser on the same night. There are four characters in this sketch. Pantaloon, the one time favorite comedian, but old and forlorn now, Mandell Weiss; the Clown, who represents present day comedy, Alexander Bowen; Fairy, the daughter of Pantaloon, Martha Beer; Harlequin, with whom Fairy is in love, Professor Reddie. A feature of the playlet is the pantomime work of Fairy and Harlequin. They do not speak a single line, but express their feelings and emotions by facial expressions, gestures and dancing.

Harold Grady, a Junior of this University, who left school last year to fill an Orpheum engagement, is appearing this week at the Pantages Theatre, Portland, in company with Miss Harriet Harlow, a well known society girl of that city. They are billed as "Favorite Society Dancers," who will present the latest terpsichorean steps and also classic dances. Prior to their stage engagement, the couple were favorably received by private audiences in many social affairs of the season.

The work of dramatizing "Peter Ibbetson," the fantastic book by George DuMaurier, is rapidly progressing, and it is expected to have the play ready for presentation early in April.

"Jeannette's Way," the Senior play, is expected to reach the campus in manuscript form most any day now," is the optimistic reply of Bert Jerard when asked regarding the matter.

The little theatre in the new auditorium, when completed, will be a "hummer," according to a certain spotlight celebrity in this University. The latest accessories necessary to the comforts of both the thespian and the auditor are being installed.
