LEAVE IT AS IT IS

Appurtenant to the late controversy over the proposed appropriation by the Student Body for the Junior year-book, arises the question whether the Student Body should not simplify the problem of unbundling the Juniors of their white elephant. It has been suggested that, even if the editorial control is left to the class, the business management should be placed in the hands of the Graduate Manager, or under his supervision.

As an easy way out of the difficulty, this plan looks attractive. In reality, however, we believe its adoption would be most unwise, not only from the standpoint of the Student Body, but from that of the Junior class as well.

We will ignore, for the sake of argument, the fact that the Student Body is hardly in a position to take over the Oregonian at this time, and that the Graduate Manager has enough to keep him busy now. We will admit that the Oregonian is a care and a vexation to the Juniors. We admit that it is a big problem for any class to tackle. And this, we maintain, is the very reason why it should be left to the Juniors. The work and worry is good for them.

There is too much of a disposition in the Student Body to shirk responsibility—to leave our Gordian knots for some local Alexander to sever. This is the danger of graduate managership. The Emerald favors the graduate managership plan heartily. But if it is going to vitiate the Student Body and destroy the initiative of its members to entrust the managerial control of its affairs to an older head, then we say that it was a mistake ever to adopt the system.

There are, however, plenty of offices open to the students which offer opportunities for the exercise of energy and brains. Any Student Body position carrying with it something besides empty "honor" does this to a certain extent, but the positions of responsibility connected with the Oregonian are especially calculated to "try men's souls."

Now, it was not blind chance or a desire to make a "goat" out of the class which prompted the Student Body, back in the early days of the old Webfoot, to entrust the Juniors with the annual. Not only is that class the fittest for the task, having had sufficient experience and being not yet beset with the troubles of graduation, but it also needs the discipline most.

College custom everywhere has ordained that in the little republic of the campus the upperclassmen shall lead in the affairs of government. Up to the third year the students are comparatively care-free, so far as responsibility to the whole body politic is concerned. Therefore, when they become Juniors they need some common cause, some difficult and arduous undertaking, to test their mettle and bind them together for the University. Without some such training, they will not be fitted for their position of leadership as Seniors.

This is the reason that the engineering of certain important undergraduate ventures here is delegated to the Juniors—namely, the Underclass Mix, Junior Week-End, and, most formidable of all, the Oregonian. The last concerns, or ought to concern, not only the editor and manager and the staff, but every member of the class.

As proof that the Oregonian does accomplish this purpose, we point to the present Junior class. During its recent campaign for an appropriation from the Student Body, the class developed more concerted "pep" than it has shown at any other stage of its notable career. Even though defeated in its efforts to convince the Student Body of the justice of its request, it has won the respect of the other classes, and, having generated this real esprit de corps, it can go forward to greater accomplishments than ever before.

No class will ever have a harder problem to meet in the Oregonian than has the present Junior class. In the first place, financial conditions will never be more adverse than at present. Also, as the University and town grow, the financing of the book will become less difficult. But it will always be a big problem—and it should always be left to the Juniors to solve.

CAMPUS NOTES

Friday evening Sigma Nu entertained Dr. C. C. McCornack, '01, and wife, recently of Japan, Erma Keithley, Kate Schaefer and Gertie Taylor, at dinner.

Miss Lotta Livermore and Mr. Lynn Livermore, of Pendleton, were dinner guests at the Chi Omega house Sunday.

Rev. O. H. Holmes, of Forest Grove, was a week-end guest at the Phi Delta Theta house.

Fred Normandin, of Portland, was a week-end guest at the Sigma Nu house.
