Oregon Sportsmanship Stands the Test.

SEVERAL WEEKS before the O. A. C.-Oregon football game the burning question was whether or not the fracas of 1910 would be repeated. Instead of a repetition of that free-for-all fight there was a free-for-all good time. At and before the game Oregonites and Aggies mingled, chatted and pow-wowed as if they were all from the same and not rival colleges. At the game there was not the usual cajoling or kidding. At the end of the game, Oregon did not rub it in. In fact a large number of the O. A. C. men stayed over in Eugene as the guests of the various organizations. And without exception they all left saying that they had had the best time ever and that Oregon knew how to entertain.

After the O. A. C. men had left Eugene, the sun came out and the Oregon enthusiasts gave vent to their real feelings after their rival rooters had left.

Nothing in the history of Oregon approached that rally. It was a true reflection of the Oregon spirit at its best. The demonstration was sportsmanlike, the parade picturesque and the spirit attem with zippiness. The only approach to the spirit shown yesterday was in 1913 when the University was triumphant at the polls. In a sizzling rain the rooters paraded the streets on that memorable day, and there was general rejoicing among the students.

At the time of the 1913 rally the administration did not remonstrate against the healthy display of spirit, which was for a cause that was felt more keenly by the faculty than by the students. Yesterday it was commendable that the faculty did not seem to object to a celebration for a cause that was felt more keenly by the students. We are glad to note this reaction on the part of the faculty: for soliciting the one and discriminating against the other, to us, seems inconsistent and narrowminded.

Can Oregon Be Beaten?

OREGON MEN and women who had the good fortune of witnessing Saturday's classic saw football history in the making, even if they were soaked to the skin from their rainy roosts at one side of the field.

Old football men sitting on the bleachers and in the grandstand shook their heads with scepticism at the battle. Oregon had not degenerated. It was the same Oregon fight as of old, and if anything it was a little better.

To coach and trainer belong the credit of turning out a team that turned the tables on O. A. C. at a time when the Aggies were cock-sure. The fight against overwhelming odds was at times hopeless, but these two mainstays of Oregon athletics plugged away spending sleepless nights in planning, and wakeful days in training.

Never has Oregon been represented by a better trained, or coached set of fighters. They were in the fittest of physical form. Eight opponents were forced to leave the field on account of injuries. Not an Oregon player left the field on that account. Oregon started in fierce and got fiercer every minute the game progressed.

Away down in our hearts we honestly feel that Oregon is secure on the gridiron for the next few years. The men that fought Saturday's game will stand out in Oregon athletic history as men who did what was generally considered the impossible. And what's more, we are tempted to lay down the axiom: Oregon can't be beaten.

Honor to the Oregon team "that trounced a team that crushed a team that smeared a team of Yosts," as one of the Portland sport scribes aptly put it.

Portland students and their friends as well as others who happen to be in the city of roses on Thanksgiving should remember that on Friday night they will have an opportunity to do the University a good turn by taking seats at the Ice Hippodrome on College night. Oregon men who take advantage of this opportunity are urged by those in charge to wear their rooster hats. Here is a chance to show Portland the Oregon Spirit, and at the same time to help towards the women's building for the University.

Congressman C. N. McArthur has sent the Oregon Aggy football team a check for $50.00, as a "starter" in a complimentary fund in lieu defeating the Michigan Aggies. And C. N. M. is an Oregon man. Maybe he'll send his compliments to the Oregon football team for beating O. A. C.
