CO-OPERATION NEEDED SAYS GRANGE MASTER

C. E. Spence Talks to Commerce Class on "Distribution;" Praises U. Work.

Greater co-operation in distribution was advocated by C. E. Spence, master of the state grange, in an address before the industrial and commercial survey class Wednesday.

"The grange is trying to educate the farmers of the state to the fact that their interest lies in concerted action," Mr. Spence stated.

"Fourteen cheese factories in the Tillamook region have combined their departments of distribution. All their business is handled by one salesman and one bookkeeper. The expense of marketing is thus greatly reduced. This idea might be extended to all the cheese factories of the state."

Mr. Spence suggested that a survey of the markets of the world would be the first step toward efficient distribution. He praised the work of the University's department of industrial and commercial service.

"The government is really the proper agency for this work," continued Mr. Spence. "The office of markets of the United States department of agriculture should extend its activity and find out how much of a certain article is produced and where there is a market for it."

"But information is not all that is needed. There must also be an organized system of distribution to bring the supply and the market together. In some cases, why not use a municipal department of distribution? The city looks after the water supply; might it not also distribute milk? In the case of products of wider market, the state or even the nation might serve as the unit."

BECKETT COMMENTS ON SYRACUSE-O. A. C. GAME

Believes That Oregon, U. of W. or W. S. C. Could Beat Easterners. "Aggies Lacked Fight."

Could the Universities of Oregon, Washington or Washington State college beat the husky Syracuse team? This is the question that many close followers of the game are asking themselves after seeing the New Yorkers walloping the Oregon Aggies last Wednesday.

Johnny Beckett, captain of the 1916 varsity, and all northwest tackle, was an interested spectator at the intersectional classic in Portland. He was quick to voice his sentiments that Oregon could beat Syracuse. "I am certain that Oregon, Washington, or Washington State at their best could trim the easterners. Syracuse has a big team averaging about 200 pounds, but they did not show any great flashes of brilliancy."

Johnny accounts for the trimming they gave the Aggies to the fact that Dr. Stewart's men simply had nothing to offer. "O. A. C. put up a sad exhibition. They lacked the punch of their former games."

Syracuse uses the same style of play as Oregon and Washington State, depending mainly on criss-cross passes and an aerial attack to advance the ball. Johnny was loud in his praises of right end Raftery, and halfback Meehan, but did not think much of the widely heralded White. The big 272-pound lineman is used chiefly to extend his arms eight feet in the air and pull down forward passes. Beckett thinks that Pete Anderson, the Aggie guard, was the real star of the game.

NEW SOCIALISM BOOK BY E. C. ROBBINS HERE

A new book on socialism by E. C. Robbins, professor of economic history at the University, is now at the University library.

The book, entitled, "Socialism," is a compilation of articles on the subject by different authors, presenting the several schools of socialism: Utopian, Christian, Marxian and Progressive.

The author states in his explanatory note that his aim is to furnish a general knowledge of the subject in such form that the busy reader can inform himself without having to keep in mind any laborious train of thought.

An extensive bibliography of nearly 200 references permits the reader to investigate the original sources of the book. These include arguments both for and against socialism.

Several discussions of socialism versus other forms of radicalism are included. The book is intended to be non-partisan.
