The Campus Has The Bug.

FROM ALL indications the campus is talking and thinking about over-organization. Since the Student Council opened the question it has received promises of aid and cooperation from all quarters.

While the committee on over-organization feels that there are probably some few organizations that have no particular purpose of general welfare to the campus, it has not adopted a policy of trying to use arbitrary force.

The fundamental aim of the committee is to enact legislation for the future, empowering the Student Council to demand that individuals anticipating organization in the future first submit to the Student Council, through a representative, a petition showing that such a society is justified and is not duplicatory.

If on the other hand an organization persists in existing without official sanction, these privileges will not only be denied them, but in the case that the Student Council feels that the organization is of a nature that would interfere materially with the student activities or throw them into wrong channels, a direct boycott could be launched.

This plan sounds radical, but it is highly necessary. The general autonomy of the college is at stake if conditions are allowed to go on unheeded. Never has the University faced such a period of depression in all legitimate pursuits.

It is time that students were throwing aside petty considerations and were entering into the so-called, but little in evidence "Oregon Spirit." Truly the surrender of absolute freedom of organization is a great sacrifice—some would and probably do call it the surrender of some inalienable right—but the sacrifice is necessary to restore the campus to a healthy and strong condition.

CAMPUS NOTES

A formal dancing party by Kappa Kappa Gamma will be given at the Osburn hotel tonight. Decorations of pussy willows and pink carnations make the dining room, converted into a ball room, beautiful.

OUT FROM UNDER BY DIOGENES TUB

Winter is over and the Emerald is full of poetry. Poetry, (Muse, strike me not) from the facile pens of 'Jawn' Gilbert, the sweet cannery singer; Milton Stoddard, the bare-kneed lover; E. J. Zahl, the full-throated Valkyrie; and last but not least we suspect A. Epping, the voice of protest. Poetry that is both bad and—worse, is superabundant.

Washington dealt us foul blow. Our Sweet Cannery Singer replied daintily. The Washington Ed. claimed his poetry too hum to print in his w—(we were tempted to print but we refrained) sheet. Here we will show him that Oregon has some one who can do worse.

Sure I now will tell the story how Washington wins a game. I do not like to tell it, but I'm going to just the same.

Don't hesitate to tell them if any you should see, For, if any one is worried, why sure it won't be we.

CHORUS Sure a lean and lanky Scotsman struck old Washington one day, And he taught the 'simps' that go there the football game to play.

Then they made a nice agreement, to play with Oregon, But when it came, to fix a date their courage sure did run.

Then they signed up with a high school and a crippled college too, And when they won the games at last, they raised a hulla-balloo.

Sure they've got a streak right down their back, 'tis known by every one, So here's to the institution that's known as Washington.

C. Anders Fee gave us a better poem on the same subject but professional jealousy makes us hold back its publication.

We are all mortal, even the faculty. We believe that suitable epitaphs should be prepared in advance. Here's a start.
