12 GET JOBS THROUGH
APPOINTMENT BUREAU

High Schools Requesting University Trained Teachers More Than Ever Before.

Twelve teaching appointments have been secured by the University appointment bureau this spring for University of Oregon graduates, and a number of other candidates are now up for election.

The high schools of the state are requesting University-trained teachers more than ever before, according to Dr. F. C. Ayer, director of the bureau. More calls are received for men who can teach physical training than there are applicants.

Those of the present graduating class who have positions are: Louise Bailey, of Eugene, who will teach physical training at Pendleton; Leonard Buoy, of Eugene, who will superintend the schools of Butte Falls; Esther Campbell, of Jennings Lodge, who is to teach science and Latin at Springfield; James Cossman, of Creswell, who will have charge of the high school and athletics at Ione; Emily Griffin, of Eugene, appointed teacher of physical training in Salem high school; Olin Hadley, of Turner, who is to be principal of the North Powder high school; Grace Lilly, of Portland, who will teach English at Ashland; Vera Williams, of Eugene, who will go to Prairie City as teacher of English history, and the commercial course, and Darl Zimmerman, of Eugene, who is to teach science and history at Sweet Home.

Among the alumni whom the appointment bureau has put in touch with vacancies are: A. T. Park, a graduate of '15, now at Hermiston, who has secured the superintendency of the Pendleton schools; Herman Oberteuffer, '14, who goes from Junction City to the principalship of McMinnville high school, and Helen Johnson, '14, now at Halsey, who will teach Latin and German at Silverton. Ann Hales, a Junior from Klamath Falls, will teach the upper grades at Goble.

Forty-one students of the women's law class of New York University, will be awarded the chancellor's certificate of efficiency at the graduating exercises to be held this month.

OFFERS EXEMPTION
FOR 3 BEST PAPERS

Instructor to Excuse From Exam 3 Who Write Best Descriptions Geological Age.

Dr. Warren D. Smith, head of the department of geology has offered exemption from final examination to the three students in his course in general geology who write the best papers descriptive of some geological age. Also Dr. Smith will present to the writer of the best of the three stories, a copy of Conan Doyle's "Lost World," a tale of fanciful romance describing a geological age in an imaginary country.

There are 52 students in the course in general geology. Dr. Smith has placed no restrictions on the competition except that the paper be not less than two typewritten pages and not more than ten in length.

"The story may be in verse, or in plain journalistic style," said Dr. Smith, "and may be as fanciful as they like, but it must cover accurately the geological period described."

Dr. Smith has used Doyle's "Lost World" in combination with the Chamberlain-Salisbury text in the course in geology this year. "The 'Lost World' brings in romance that helps the students understand and remember the dry facts of the text," said Dr. Smith.

This is the first time that Dr. Smith has tried the plan of offering exemption from final examination as a reward for special work done.

LOANED $500 COLLECTION

University is Recipient of Rock and Mineral Exhibit.

The University department of geology is the recipient of the loan of a collection of rocks and minerals, which is valued at $500 and which makes the University of Oregon mineral collection one of the best on the Pacific coast, according to Dr. Warren D. Smith, head of that department. The collection comes from H. N. Lawrie, a Portland engineer, and is loaned to the University for an indefinite length of time. Dr. Smith says that the collection will probably be purchased by the University later.
