HARTHAN DE FELL BUYS HAT;
EVERYONE TAKES LOOK AT IT

Dapper Spanish Professor Mistaken for Proprietor of Patent Medicine Show by Portland Haberdasher.

Portland, Ore., Oct. 10.—(Special to the Emerald.)—Some of the prominent moving picture impresarios are thinking of producing a two-reel comedy based on the recent adventures of Professor J. Harthan DeFell, the popular and debonaire teacher of Spanish at the University of Oregon, who visited Portland last week to conduct some extension classes at the Public Library.

When reduced to scenario form the episode would read about as follows:

Professor DeFell, whose sartorial perfections have made him a distinguished figure in Portland as well as on the University campus, is seen strolling jauntily along Washington street, near Broadway. He spies a new style lemon-colored hat of the broad-brimmed variety in a haberdashery window. He admires the hat. He dashes into the store. The clerk obliges him. He tries on the hat. It fits. His initials are punched into the band while the cashier is making change. Price, $7.50. The professor nonchalantly tosses his old hat into a corner and saunters out into the sunshine under the ample shade of his newly-acquired possession. Presently the professor becomes conscious that he is attracting undue attention. Streeturchins grin at him and school girls giggle. He goes into the court house, where friends frankly tell him that the hat was made for a man of Jess Willard's proportions rather than for a dapper little fellow like the Spanish professor. This opinion is confirmed at the barber shop. Professor DeFell, alarmed over his blunder, rushes back to the store. "What do you mean by selling me a hat like this," he demands. "The shape is too big for me." "You said you wanted it, and I sold it to you," argues the clerk. "I thought you wanted it to attract customers to your business." "My business!" exploded the professor. "Why, I am a teacher at the University of Oregon." "Good Heavens!" gasped the clerk. "I thought you were the proprietor of a patent medicine show around the corner." Everyone recovers from the shock and apologies are made all around. The clerk agrees to take back the hat and the professor takes a late creation in black velour in exchange. Cost, $3.50 more.

Reports from Eugene this morning that Professor DeFell has blossomed out on the campus in a brand new black velour hat confirms the belief that the proposed comedy thriller is founded on fact.

FIRST MEETING WITH

from Mrs. Villard was read by President P. L. Campbell.

Resolutions of condolence were introduced and passed by the students, out of respect to Mrs. William L. Hayward, Mrs. V. L. Granger and Kenneth Kellems, whose deaths occurred during the past summer.

A flash of the old Oregon Spirit showed through the demonstration that greeted Coach Hugo Bezdek, who urged that the campus give up its funereal atmosphere and greet the situation with a smile.

"I've been back in New York and along the Atlantic seacoast and they laugh and joke back there. Out at the polo grounds when we played the giants there were 600 soldiers in uniform present, singing and hurrahing. "That's what we've got to get here. See?"

Bezdek urges that every man who weighed over 130 pounds see Charles Dundore, manager of the football team, and secure a suit, because of the lack of material on Kincaid field.

Bill Hayward, who objects to being called the "grand old man of Oregon," gave a brief talk on the shortage of men and praised the men who are turning out merely because of loyalty to the school.

School's Total Enrollment in January Was Only 934.

A total registration of eight hundred seventy-six students is the latest report from the Registrar's office. This is an increase of fifteen over last year's total at this time. The office has not yet given out complete statements about the separate number of boys and girls registered.

Last year's record, which was closed some time in January, had 934 for a total, and at that rate A. R. Tiffany, Registrar, expects one thousand or more to close this year's registration.
