RURAL LIFE PROBLEM
TOPIC OF QUARTERLY

Commonwealth Review Delayed In Publication, Is Just Off Press.

The latest number of the Commonwealth Review, a quarterly edited by the faculty of the department of economics and sociology in the University, which had been delayed through the assumption of the S. A. T. C. activities here last term, has just recently come off the University press and is now ready for mailing.

The issue of the Commonwealth Review includes papers bearing on the general problems of making Oregon's resources progressively available for the support of the highest type of rural community life. Just now this means immediate and wise provision of attractive homes on farms for the returning soldiers.

The publication contains an article concerning "Soldier's Homes and Oregon Resources," written by Frederick G. Young, professor of economics and sociology, who is managing editor of the Review. The article is one of a number of papers prepared for discussion at the Tenth Annual Commonwealth Conference held in Portland last July, at which time a reconstruction movement was begun in the state to open up industrial opportunities in the anticipation of the homecoming of our soldiers.

Benton Mackaye Contributor.
Benton Mackaye of the United States Department of Labor has contributed an article entitled "Reconstruction and Natural Resources," in which he discusses Oregon's soil, forests, ores and water power, in the light of, and aid of, reconstruction. Mr. Mackaye says, "National reconstruction is going to require state reconstruction, as well as the most friendly possible co-operation between the two jurisdictions. And it is a promising sign to see the state of Oregon, and its University, taking a firm hold in the leadership of this movement."

In a paper on the idle hands of Oregon, written by Thornton T. Munger, of the United States Forest Service, promoting the idea of the back-to-the-land movement in increasing the state's population by colonies of returning soldiers. Mr.

Munger cited the need for farmers in both eastern and western Oregon. In the latter part of the state there are 2,000,000 acres of unimproved, slashed-over land, 50 per cent of which is agricultural, and which is sufficient to support 12,500 families, allowing 80 acres to the farm. Land Not Productive.

It is pointed out by Mr. Munger that much of this land in its present state is not productive, and it is his idea that the government should take steps to encourage the little farmer and the homesteader by financing the clearing of these lands as well as putting up houses and buildings. This backing would greatly assist the beginner and could in time be paid off by small installments.

Along this idea of reconstruction, Burt P. Kirkland, professor in the College of Forestry of Washington, has contributed an article on the "Continuous Forest Production in the Pacific Northwest." A summary of the program which he submitted to the Commonwealth Review is as follows:

To Require Reforestation.

1. Require that all permanent forest lands be reforested to at least 75 per cent full stocking following cutting. The cost of this is so small that it is not unreasonable to put it on the private owner as a part of his obligation as a trustee of an important renewable resource.

2. Require protection of young growth from fire. In case any is destroyed the owner should be required to reforest. This will insure efficient protection.

3. Begin consolidating ownership in economic hands and in workable units for continuous forest production.

4. Place each tract on a continuous sustained yield basis so that each year income will be available to meet all expenses and pay annual returns on the investment, just as a farmer or railroad or city block pays annual returns.

The article also contains in this issue a Review written by John H. Lewis, state engineer, who offers suggestions of available projects for employment in irrigation and drainage work. He discusses the Chamberlain bill now before congress which provides for loaning the credit of the United States for irrigation districts, for the construction of approved projects by the federal government, these to be turned over to the community upon completion.

BURLE BRAMHALL WRITE

Former Manager of Emerald Gets Discharge From Army.

In a letter to M. F. McClain, of the business office, Burle Bramhall, manager of the Emerald for one year, writes from Seattle that now he is out of the service, where he obtained his commission as second lieutenant, he is hot on the trail for a job.

"Received my discharge from the army on December 13 and am now hot on the trail for a job, he said. At present I have two positions in view.

"Little as it was, my war work at the Co-op constitutes nearly all the practical experience I have had.

"I have but one regret for my time spent in the service, that I did not get across. Things were breaking pretty good when the armistice spoiled it all. After being commissioned at Hancock I was finally assigned to the 95th division at Camp Sherman, Sherman is a good camp, we had a splendid bunch of young officers and were rapidly whipping our organization into shape.

"I have been lecturing in the divisional officers school for the last two months, handling the technique of machine gun fire. There was a lieutenant colonel, three majors, a number of captains, and first and second lieutenants galore in the school and the work was very interesting. I was making good and had been recommended for a first lieutenancy.

OREGON MAN, 31, IS

Harvard C. Moore '09 Major of Sanitary Train Now in Germany.

Harvard C. Moore, graduate of the University with the class of '09 is, at the age of 31, a major in command of the sanitary train of the Third army corps with the army of occupation in Germany. The sanitary train is made up of five ambulance companies and five field companies.

Major Moore graduated from the Oregon School of Medicine in Portland, and in 1915 enlisted in the regular army and attended the Army Medical school in Washington, D. C.

In 1916 he went to the Mexican border and served there for two years with ambulance companies, receiving his training under his brother-in-law, Lieutenant Colonel McCormick.

In February, 1919, he went to France where he was in command of Field Hospital 27. He was at Chateau Thierry and St. Mihiel, and during the last weeks of the war, without any rest, he was in charge of a hospital near the Argonne front.

During the Argonne battle, Major Moore left the hospital and worked in the trenches for several days with men who were severely wounded.

Mrs. Moore, who is staying at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Wilkins on West Ninth street, received a letter from her husband yesterday from Coblenz, Germany, saying that he now has hospitals stationed all along the line of occupation and that his headquarters will probably be near Coblenz.

If the Third army moves overseas for some time, Mrs. Moore anticipates going abroad to join her husband.

Major Moore is a member of the Alpha Kappa Kappa medical fraternity.

MILES M'KEY BACK; RANKS AS CAPTAIN

Anti-Aircraft Officer is in Three
Train Wrecks on Return To Oregon.

Numbered among the old Oregon men who are back to school this term is Miles McKey, captain in anti-aircraft division of the artillery. McKey left school in May of 1917 as sergeant major, senior grade, Oregon Coast Artillery. He attended the first officers training camp at the Presidio, where he was stationed until June. He then received a transfer to Fort Scott, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant.

McKey returned to Fort Stevens from Scott and was connected with the Oregon coast artillery until late in September. During this time he was advanced to a first lieutenant. He left Fort Stevens for Fort Monroe, Virginia, where he received his captaincy in the anti-aircraft sector.

From Fort Monroe he was sent to Fort Dade, Florida. This fort is one of the most southern points in the United States, being several miles out in Tampa bay on a small island. McKey remained at this fort until he received his discharge December 16.

McKey spent most of the war, as he says, chasing around over the United States and attending officers' schools. His sector was billed to leave for France the last week in November, but were never embarked. On his way home McKey was in three train wrecks, but was not hurt.

McKey is a law major and is back taking work under Dean Hope. He is a senior this year and says that even seniors can forget a lot when they are away for any length of time.
