

TWO RARE FOSSIL SPECIMENS LISTED

Some of Condon Collection Held New to Science.

PAMPHLET IS PUBLISHED

Noted Paleontologist Issues Bulletin On Mollusks.

That two of the eleven species of fossil mollusks from the John Day Valley included in the Condon museum of the University are new to science, is the statement of Dr. G. Dallas Hanna, noted paleontologist, in a publication on the subject just issued by the department of geology on the subject of the ancient life of Oregon.

This publication, just printed by the University Press under the direction of Dr. E. L. Packard, acting head of the department, the first paleontological paper in the research series created by the University of Oregon last year.

Dr. Hanna, who wrote the report, is curator of mollusks in the California Academy of Science in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco. He was formerly connected with the University of Kansas and is the leading authority on the Pacific Coast on recent and fossil fresh-water mollusks, according to Dr. Packard.

Lived 2,000,000 Years Ago.

The two new species among the eleven collected by Dr. Condon in the John Day Valley, all of which were sent to Dr. Hanna for a survey and returned by him, are the helician oregona and the rhiostoma americana. Both are snails that lived in the oligocene age, about two million years ago. The helician oregona had not been previously reported in the oligocene of the United States, Dr. Hanna points out. "It is another instance," he says, "of tropical forms which flourished much north of their present range at that time." The rhiostoma has living Asiatic relatives in Siam, representing a surprising survival of an oligocene type.

Whole Collection Labeled.

Dr. Hanna went over the entire 118 specimen of fresh-water fossils collected by the pioneer Oregon geologist classified and labeled them.

The pamphlet just out is the sixth of the Oregon publication series representing original research work. The first five were published by Prof. C. A. Gregory of the school of education.

Dr. Raymond H. Wheeler, professor of psychology; Dr. W. D. Smith, professor of geology and Dr. Edmund S. Conklin, professor of psychology.

Hayward Describes Olympic Conditions

care of the practice work and only the stadium track was available for the workouts. An aviation field was pressed into service for the American team to use.

Team Criticizes Committee.

Hayward does not make a criticism of the method in which the team was handled but members of the team who made the trip are loud in their criticism of the hospitality afforded them and the treatment, quarters and food which they were subjected to in making the trip to the games. Indignation meetings were held on the boat several times during the trip across and action has been started throughout the country to remove the members of the American committee from their office, on account of the mismanagement in taking care of the team. Had it not been for the army authorities who took the matter into their own hands, the team would have been forced to go without butter, and a number of other foods, in their menu.

Hayward says that the Belgian people did not appear to know that the Olympic games were being held and that on the opening day of the games, about 4,000 people put in appearance at the gate while a bicycle race in Antwerp that day, which had no connection with the Olympic games, drew a crowd of 40,000 spectators. The Belgian team also made a very poor showing in the games, making but three or four points during the meet. The Belgian officials who had charge of the affair were highly unsatisfactory to the Americans, and the reports that American athletes were hissed by the Belgians while taking part in the races, are absolutely true, according to Hayward. Dates and schedules for events on the program were changed over night by the officials and the athletes and coaches were not notified of the change.

Tuck Twists Knee.

Arthur Tuck, University of Oregon athlete, who made the trip with the Olympic team, had the misfortune to dislocate his weak knee after the first throw. "Ken" afterwards took an extended trip throughout France and Belgium before returning home. "Bill" Hayward also visited a number of interesting points in Europe and England and sailed for home on the Imperator from Cherbourg, France on August 28th. Bill had the good fortune to make the trip over the old battle lines in France in an aeroplane, taking about 8 hours for the tour.

OREGON CLUB MEETS.

The men's Oregon Club, composed of all University students not living in University residences, met last night in the Y hut to formulate plans for the coming year. Arrangements were made for a stag mix to be given this term for all non-fraternity men not living in University dormitories, although a definite date was not set. A dance will be given by the club the second term, and a picnic during the third quarter.
