IN REPLY TO THE BAROMETER.

The Barometer, O. A. C.'s student publication, is quite susceptible to the long-range fluctuations of the sometimes uncontrollable Oregon Spirit. An editorial in a recent number of the publication of our sister institution, reprinted in another column of this issue of the Emerald, declares that the standard of courtesy shown here at Oregon is inconceivable. Our worthy contemporary has imposed upon Oregon a "boasted culture," and then ruthlessly stripped the University of that culture, leaving us, in the eyes of the Barometer's many readers, devoid of gentlemanly and sportsmanlike principles.

The iconoclastic editorial referred to was written in condemnation of the reception given to a group of O. A. C. letter men who visited Eugene to witness the Oregon-Multnomah game. In apologizing for this spirit of rivalry unwisely displayed on the spur of the moment, the Emerald begs for a word of explanation. The Barometer accuses the Oregon rooters unjustly. True, the men students sang the little ditty referred to in a manner so vividly worded in the obnoxious editorial, but they sang it with smiles and intermingled laughter; true, the band failed to finish the O. A. C. song, but if the person who carried the word back to the Barometer editorial sanctum were a student of crowd psychology he would read in those performances not malice, not hatred, not an absence of "boasted culture" but just humor unwisely expressed.

But the Barometer does not even remotely refer to an extenuating circumstance which, in the opinion of the Emerald, measurably alleviated the previous wrongs. The Barometer does not tell its readers that the students of the institution at Eugene, which "turns out polished ladies and gentlemen," gave O. A. C. a yell, a sincere sportsmanlike yell which partly atoned for the previous misinterpreted humor.

Nevertheless, such action on the part of Oregon students is to be condemned. Although we do not "boast of our culture" we should demonstrate to publications which judge the culture of an institution by the actions of its students at a football game, that we do receive culture at Oregon.

The students of the University sincerely apologize to the highly-offended Barometer for the unpremeditated outburst of spirit. But the editorial referred to might have caused more unfriendly feeling among new students who do not understand the friendly rivalry existing between the two great state institutions than a hundred such trivial displays of unwise rooting.

The Emerald assures the Barometer that inhospitable rooting and booing of O. A. C. men who attend Oregon games will not happen again. A friendly rivalry between Oregon and O. A. C. is necessary, but some other means must be found to foster such a spirit.

Current Thoughts Of Various College Editors.

U. of O. CULTURE. (O. A. C. Barometer.)

In view of the supposed culture of our sister institution at Eugene, it is difficult for a student of O. A. C. to conceive of the standard of courtesy set up at the university, as shown by the way it treats its visitors. In the popular mind the university is supposed to turn out polished ladies and gentlemen, while the college tends more to the practical. In actual practice, however, such does not seem to be the case.

The only way of judging the extent of culture in any institution is by the action of its students. Examples of typical Oregon spirit in this regard are too numerous to mention. Let a few recent ones suffice. Last Saturday a number of O. A. C. students, including several letter men, went over to Eugene to see the university play Multnomah. Upon their arrival the crowd sang a song, the principal refrain of which ran "To hell with O. A. C." This hospitable reception was greatly appreciated. It helps to ward a friendly feeling between the two institutions. Following this the band started to play an O. A. C. song, but after a few measures burst forth into one grand discord.

It is hard to reconcile such action with the university's boasted culture. We at O. A. C. may be trained among the cattle and chickens, but we are trained to be courteous to our guests. We have been taught that terming visitors "cattle" was not the essence of hospitality.

We must not now lower our standard by dealing in the U. of O. method. If Oregon men are present at the game tomorrow, they will be treated as guests. Perhaps an object lesson will do some good.

THE FORUM

To the Editor:— I am sure that the students of the University do not realize all of the agencies which there are on the campus to help them solve their problems. One of the regulations of the Student Living Committee is that no new clubs or fraternities shall be formed in the University unless they have first the approval of this committee.

The object of this rule, is not to curtail the formation of clubs, particularly, but to give them such sound advice that they may be founded along lines which will make for permanence and strong organization. The committee has accumulated information of many sorts which would be very useful to a group which expects to run a house and to equip it or furnish it as living quarters.

The committee has also some experience in the matter of leases and is able and willing to help protect a new group in their relations to the landlord. The committee will also be able to furnish estimates for the year's budget and in many other ways is prepared to aid and assist a new group.

Yours very truly,
JOHN F. BOVARD,
Chairman Student Living Committee.
