Mr. Evans says he has never before had charge of a glee club which promised such a successful year. The preliminary tryouts have shown a large amount of very fine material, so much in fact that two or three extra men are to be carried on each part for several weeks.

OFFICE FOR OREGANA

Editor and Manager To Be Housed in Remodeled Gymnasium.

Wanna McKinney and Warren Kays, editor and manager of the Oregana, are congratulating each other on the possession of an office all their own. They are to have one of the new offices now under construction in what was formerly the women's gym and it is expected that they can move in a very short time. At present they are using a portion of the typewriting room in the journalism annex.

In past years the heads of both the Emerald and the Oregana staffs have been forced to work in a single office and much confusion and inconvenience has resulted, states Miss McKinney, so the new arrangement will doubtless prove very satisfactory to both.

Confidence
A word more important today in business, professional or political world than ever before. No person, institution or government can succeed without it. We say then that the fundamental principle of success is confidence, which is what we have endeavored to establish in the minds of our patrons towards this business, and we believe our success has been largely due to having this confidence.
We believe the confidence which you have placed in this institution more highly than any other asset we have, and our purpose now, as always, is to give service and merchandise of quality that will still further increase that confidence.
It is a mighty easy thing to show comparative prices at this time, because for four years merchandise has not had an intrinsic value; so for the present, we are going to discontinue showing comparative prices in all our advertisements, because they might be misleading although literally compared to prices prevailing during the past three years, true. When prices are quoted you may be assured they will have real merit and the merchandise will be dependable and of the kind and quality to retain your confidence.
